Condemnation proceedings instituted by the city of Atlanta recently against property on West Hunter street to be used in erection of an approach to the Spring street viaduct will be dropped and no further efforts on the part of the city will be made to carry out this work, should the street committee of council heed the city law department's recommendations to be made at next Friday's meeting by City Attorney James L. Mayson.

The city attorney announced Tuesday that in view of pending injunction against the city obtained by C. H. Johnson and other Hunter street property owners restraining the city from going on with its work in this direction and from collecting assessments in the special tax zone, that he would recommend that no further efforts to erect the approach be made by the city.

"In view of the opposition that has developed from certain property owners whose property would be affected by the erection of the approach," declared Mr. Mayson, "I will recommend to the street committee of council that further efforts to carry out the original plan be abandoned."

Suit Too Costly.

"The city could go ahead with its program and erect the approach, but since it has been impossible to effect a satisfactory assessment against property owners in the immediate vicinity, it would probably cost the city a greater sum than would be its share of the burden. If the property owners adjacent to the proposed approach do not want it their wishes should be considered."

Condemnation proceedings were instituted by the city against the property several months ago after a special councilmanic committee had recommended this step be taken to insure erection of the approach. The details for the approach passed from the hands of the viaduct committee of the bond commission and council's bridge committee to the street committee of council, of which Councilman Claude L. Ashley is chairman.

Before the city attorney filed condemnation proceedings against the property, several efforts were made to adjust the differences existing between property owners who favored it and those who disapproved it, but no satisfactory plan could be worked out to finance the undertaking.

Mr. Johnson, one of the property owners opposing the project, obtained

Waukegan, Ill., September 25.—Traffic Officer Harold Bean didn't like it when he found his fair cousin, Miss Alice Vaughn, in the arms of Arthur Johnson on a moon-lit night.

He arrested them on a charge of disorderly conduct.

"It happened to be offering my heart to the lady," Johnson told Justice Boyle Tuesday.

"Young man, I don't blame you," the judge replied. "Case dismissed, and allow me to present you with a box of cigars."

"Sure, and you can kiss the bride," replied Johnson.

MAY ABANDON PLANS

Detroit, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—Sale of the Gorgas steam power plant to the Alabama Power company probably means that Henry Ford will make no further bid for the remaining government properties at Muscle Shoals, Ala., it was learned here today.

Mr. Ford himself was not at his Dearborn offices today and could not be reached to discuss the action of the government in disposing of part of the Muscle Shoals property.

At the Ford offices, however, it was pointed out that Mr. Ford already had made it plain the Gorgas plant was considered vital to the economical operation of the Muscle Shoals property.

Montgomery, Ala., September 25.—The senate of the Alabama legislature this afternoon adopted a resolution urging Henry Ford to revise his offer for the Muscle Shoals, Ala., project. The resolution held out hope that the Detroit manufacturer might yet purchase the nitrate plant at Muscle Shoals.

Washington, September 25.—Sale of the Gorgas steam power plant to the Alabama Power company for approximately three and a half million dollars is held by President Coolidge to have affected in no wise the offer of Henry Ford to buy and lease the Muscle Shoals properties in Alabama.

ANNEXATION VOTE
ON NEXT TUESDAYAdvantages of Annexation to Atlanta for East Point, College Park and Hapeville Considerable.

Citizens of East Point, College Park and Hapeville will vote next Tuesday, October 2, on whether or not their towns shall become part of the great city of Atlanta. This election was provided for in bills which were passed at the last session of the legislature and on Tuesday, in accordance with Georgia law, the people affected by the proposed change, the citizens of these three places, will decide the issue for themselves.

There is one difference in the issue, as it is to be voted on in each of these three places. East Point, which lies between Atlanta and the other two, College Park and Hapeville, will become part of the greater city if its citizens so vote, regardless of how the other two elections come out. But in the cases of College Park and Hapeville, they are closely interested in the East Point election as well as their own, because if East Point defeats annexation, the other two, cut off from Atlanta by the intervening East Point, cannot be annexed, no matter how their own votes show.

Up to East Point.

All of which means, considered in another way, that any East Pointers who may, for some reason or other, feel inclined to vote against annex-

Berlin, September 25.—Support of Chancellor Stresemann in his efforts to bring about a speedy termination of the Ruhr and Rhineland conflict has sufficiently crystallized to warrant the prediction that the government will command more than a comfortable majority in approval of its formal declaration to the reichstag Thursday. So far the government has been vouchsafed the support of the Ruhr and Rhineland, as voiced by its authorized spokesmen at Monday's prolonged conference support, which it is emphasized, adequately reflects the immediate sentiment of the people of the occupied areas.

The charges that this conference was not representative is countered by the government with the statement that the man with the chancellor summoned to Berlin yesterday constituted the same group as recommended passive resistance to Chancellor Cuno.

The chancellor's conference today with the members of the federal states and members of the federal council was also in complete accord with the cabinet's procedure, even the redoubtable Dr. Voss. Killing admitting the inevitable necessity of scrapping resistance in the face of overwhelming financial, economic and social orders. The Bavarian premier proved surprisingly docile.

Demand Ultimatum.

After conferring with the visiting premiers, the chancellor received delegations, representing the reichstag parties, of which the German nationalists alone assume an oppositional attitude. The reactionaries demanded nothing short of an ultimatum to France and a breach of relations unless the occupying powers immediately conceded the points of honor which Stresemann sought to make a prior condition to his surrender of passive resistance.

Sturdivant.

Duke Wellborn, who was indicted Tuesday by the Fulton county grand jury in connection with the robbery a week ago of the Lyric theater, is an escaped convict from the Richmond county chain gang, according to Lieutenant T. O. Sturdivant, of the plain clothes department, who stated Tuesday that his department had made sure of Wellborn's identification.

Wellborn was serving a term of ten years for burglary, Captain Sturdivant said. His brother and another convict made their escape at the time Wellborn did, the detective head said he was informed.

Wellborn was taken into custody the day after the robbery by Detectives O. R. Jones and E. W. Ginn, who disguised themselves in overalls to slip up on Wellborn, who was arrested while seated behind the steering wheel of a new highpowered machine.

Detective Pat Campbell, who has been directing the investigation into the Lyric robbery, Tuesday stated that he is sure Wellborn knows a great deal more about the affair than he has told.

When arrested, Wellborn is said to have had about $300 on his person, more than $200 of which was found in a sock after the shoe was removed. "He has been unable to explain possession of this money," Officer Campbell stated.

Norfolk, Va., September 25.—Two women, Mrs. James P. Stevenson and Mrs. J. W. Athens, September 25.—Bulgarian revolutionists, advancing upon Sofia, have wiped out the town of Peroustia in an artillery bombardment, according to late reports received here.

Zankoff forces, stationed in the town, were forced to evacuate, and retreated in disorder.

While reports of the communist activities are confused and frequently conflicting, it is evident that the movement is gaining strength, particularly in the northern provinces.

The Zankoff government, determined to crush the rebellion, has ordered the enlistment of 10,000 men, but recruiting is proceeding slowly.

The report continues that the rebels have cut communications between Constantinople and Sofia, and have also isolated Varna, the Black sea port, by cutting the line between Varna and Kazanlik.

Occupies Ishtiman.

London, September 25.—Bulgarian revolutionists have occupied the town of Ishtiman, only 50 kilometers from Sofia, the capital, according to a Belgrade dispatch to The Morning Post. The dispatch adds that the central government has appointed the minister of war as national dictator. He will lead all the operations against the insurgent forces. It is admitted the latter have now created a situation full of danger.

Marching on Sofia.

Belgrade dispatches report that the Agrarian communist revolutionaries in Bulgaria are marching on Sofia from Radomir, using captured field artillery in combating government troops. Official circles are anxiously watching the coup, but little is known of its extent as a veil of censorship conceals the actual state of affairs in Bulgaria.

Official Sofia messages admit that the rebellion is spreading, but declare that the government can cope with the movement. Messages from other Balkan capitals, however, report alarming developments.

While these messages may be exaggerated, they undoubtedly have some foundation in fact and indicate that the situation is more grave than Sofia admits.

Monday morning of this week The Constitution started the famous Jane Hedden Hat Service. In twenty-four hours The Constitution's mail was swamped with orders for the beautiful models shown in the first day of the service, proving the pattern service to be a long-felt want of the women readers of this paper. Already indications point to this service becoming as popular as the dress pattern service, which brings daily from 200 to 300 replies.

Macon, Ga., September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—Taking of testimony in the case of Dr. C. A. Yarbrough, charged with rioting in connection with the whipping of W. O. Barnett, proceeded so rapidly today that the defense at 6:20 o'clock announced that it had run out of witnesses and asked for a recess until tomorrow morning at 9 o'clock. Attorneys after adjournment stated that they expected the case to reach the jury stage by noon and that it was possible that the arguments would be concluded and the jury start consideration of the case by night.

The state rested its case shortly after court convened for the afternoon session and the defense at once began offering character witnesses in an effort to impeach the state's witnesses. The state today declined to cross-examine any of the defense character witnesses and as a result the specific instances of alleged bad actions on the part of accusers of Dr. Yarbrough were brought out in the trial two weeks ago of the Mills flogging case.

Four Hours' Argument.

Attorneys will be allowed four hours for argument when the case reaches the jury stage, two hours for each side, it was announced.

Solicitor Moore stated that another flogging case would be called immediately after the present trial is ended, but declined to state which defendant would be put on trial. At the end of this week, however, if present plans are carried out, the flogging cases will be laid aside and civil business of the court taken up. One court official said that it was probable that cases other than those reached this week would not be called until the December term.

Trial of the Barnett case was accelerated considerably today when Judge Will Gunn, presiding in city court, ruled that testimony regarding the flogging of R. F. Mills, of Hapeville, Ga., former Macon barber and chiropractor, could not be used in any other of the cases against Dr. Yarbrough, because the dentist had been acquitted on the charge. He ruled that such testimony would serve to impeach a verdict of the court duly rendered.

The defense in opening its case introduced into the record articles in The Macon Telegraph and The Macon News regarding the rewards offered by various persons and organizations for arrest and conviction of the alleged floggers. A page from the ledger of Dr. Yarbrough, showing the account of W. W. Arnold, one of his accusers, was also introduced and Chief Counsel John P. Ross read into the record portions of the transcript of the testimony.

Has Safety Emerged.

He urged the bankers that when they had returned to their houses they would impress upon the many within their influence that the nation had safely emerged from the eddies of war into the calm harbor of the moment, through which it could safely sail without fear of storm.

"But," he declared in the conclusion of his address, "let us warn that we are headed for the open sea where, if our ship would safely sail, we must be prepared for the powerful rollers of world competition, and that now, in this period of calm, is the time for us to see that the ship is freed of barnacles that retard its progress, that it is caulked and made ready, and that the crew is trained for service."

City Bank Says Conditions Are Even More Favorable Than During War.

Atlantic City, September 25.—The American Bankers' association convenes this year with business conditions of the moment the most favorable the country has known since our entry into the great war, and I do not except the periods during, or those immediately following, the war," declared Charles E. Mitchell, president of the National City Bank of New York City, in an address delivered before the American Bankers' association, in annual convention today in Atlantic City.

"Everyone of business judgment recognizes, and in fact knew at the time, that the conditions of those years were abnormal, that we were not on a sound and permanent basis, and that sooner or later a settlement day was coming," continued Mr. Mitchell.

"The crisis of 1920 and 1921 was severe—in fact, perhaps, the most severe in the history of the business world, because practically all the world had shared in the conditions that led up to it and was involved in the collapse. In our own country the fall of prices was without a precedent, because the state of inflation had been more general and the disorganization of world trade and industry greater than ever before known."

"As the war temporarily increased the dependence of Europe upon this country, so the expansion of our production to meet the temporary needs of Europe made us more dependent upon European markets than we had been before, and the ordeal of readjustment was inevitable. The manner in which the United States passed through this ordeal, put its losses behind it, and regained its prosperity is something over which we may feel profound satisfaction. Our productive powers are intact; they are functioning efficiently, and our banking and financial system is equal to any demands that may be laid upon it."

Mr. Mitchell declared the United States was today enjoying a real state of prosperity.

"We should be cognizant of it and instill so far as we are able a spirit of confidence throughout business America that will extend the life of the prosperous period," he declared.

He urged the bankers that when they had returned to their houses they would impress upon the many within their influence that the nation had safely emerged from the eddies of war into the calm harbor of the moment, through which it could safely sail without fear of storm.

"But," he declared in the conclusion of his address, "let us warn that we are headed for the open sea where, if our ship would safely sail, we must be prepared for the powerful rollers of world competition, and that now, in this period of calm, is the time for us to see that the ship is freed of barnacles that retard its progress, that it is caulked and made ready, and that the crew is trained for service."

Contested Elections in State of San Luis Potosi
May Have Bearing on Presidential Race.

Mexico City, September 25.—President-elect Obregon is facing probably the greatest test of his administration, following the muddled and dangerous situation which has arisen from the contested elections in the state of San Luis Potosi.

Conflicting political currents, developing to a heated point in view of the coming presidential elections, have created a situation whereby Obregon is being severely attacked from several different quarters.

The immediate crisis arises from the polling in San Luis Potosi, where after two men claimed election as governor, Obregon declared the election null and void and ordered a new election. Not only has this action aroused the president's political enemies, but the United States learns that it has created a split between Obregon and his secretary of the treasury, Adolfo de la Huerta. Officially, the latter is supposed to be on a two months' leave of absence, but it is currently reported that he has severed himself from the cabinet and is preparing to run for the presidency.

Other cabinet resignations may follow.

Fear that a return to turbulent times may be in store for Mexico is heightened by the threatening attitude of the two San Luis gubernatorial candidates, Prieto Laurens, former mayor of Mexico City, and Aurelio Manrique, who both declare they will assume the office of governor Wednesday morning. A clash between followers of the two men is feared.

De la Huerta's split with the president is said to have followed an unsuccessful attempt on his part to have Obregon delay his step in nullifying the election.

Airing of charges preferred by Mrs. Alice Lytle in the Columbia Sentinel that she saw Commissioner J. J. Brown, of the state agricultural department; Speaker of the House W. Cecil Neill, and President of the Senate George Carswell together on the last night of the recent legislative session a few moments before the legislative chiefs announced the personnel of the agricultural department investigating committee, featured the session of the committee Tuesday.

A sharp verbal clash between Mrs. Lytle and Sam L. Olive, attorney for the agricultural department, in which Representative Charles E. Stewart, of Atkinson, also participated, enlivened the session.

With reference to her charge of having seen the head of the department under probe in company with the heads of the two legislative branches just before the investigators were named, Mrs. Lytle varied her testimony somewhat from accounts of the charges which have appeared in the Sentinel.

In these articles she stated that she saw the three emerging from a room in the capitol late on the final night of the 1923 session, and that immediately afterwards President Carswell and Speaker Neill announced the personnel in the investigating committee, in the senate and house, respectively.

proposed assembly had been granted by Federal District Judge John H. Cottrell.

Statement Denied.
Newspapers called to the executive's attention the fact that Judge Cottrell had denied the statement attributed to him in a local newspaper that he saw no reason why the legislators could not assemble in the United States district court room.

"Well, such a plan had been rumored at any rate," Walton replied.

"If the legislators meet on federal property then the government has the baby on its hands to raise," the governor said.

Telegram to President.
The telegram dispatched by the executive to President Coolidge and the attorney general followed:

"Unquestionable mutilations have been inflicted upon numerous citizens of this state, and scores of others have been taken from their homes at night and beaten and flogged in a most unmerciful way. This state is now under martial law by proclamation issued by me and military courts are now sitting in Tulsa and in Oklahoma City investigating these barbarous acts.

"These courts have taken testimony, much of it coming from the lips of klansmen themselves, showing that each and all of these atrocities have been committed by members of the so-called Knights of the Ku Klux Klan or the invisible government or the invisible empire. I have authentic information showing that a great majority of the members of the house of representatives of Oklahoma legislature are members of the so-called invisible government. These klansmen, members of the house, constituting a majority of its membership, in collusion with high Klan officials are attempting to hold a session in Oklahoma City with the avowed determination of impeaching me and thereby halting my investigating and preventing subsequent exposures which will show the inner workings of this un-American mob organization known as the Ku Klux Klan.

Session "Unlawful."
"A meeting of the legislature at this state or any branch of it in extra-session without the call of the governor is unlawful and unauthorized by the constitution and laws of this state. The only purpose of this unlawful assembly is to further complicate matters and give aid and comfort to the Klan.

"I will not permit this assembly in the capital and the afternoon newspapers state that permission to use the federal court room here for its meeting has been granted by Judge John N. Cottrell, judge of the western district of Oklahoma.

"In view of the conditions existing in this state at this time and in light of exposures already made and given to the American public I appeal to you in the name of the people of Oklahoma and true Americanism to use your good offices to prevent this unlawful assembly in any federal building in this state.

35,000 VOLUNTEER TROOPS ARE CLAIMED BY WALTON
Thirty-five thousand men in the state have volunteered for service in the Oklahoma National Guard during the legislative crisis, Governor J. C. Walton announced here tonight.

The executive made it plain, however, that he anticipated no necessity for calling the volunteers to duty.

The executive made light of reports that there would be bloodshed and violence when the legislators attempt to meet tomorrow.

"Why, I could take a cap-pistol and drive all of those fellows into the Red river," the governor said jocularly. "I don't think there will be a bit of trouble."

LEGISLATORS ARE GIVEN WARNING BY MARKHAM
A general order issued by Adjutant General B. H. Markham forbidding the convening tomorrow of a special session of the state house of representatives served late today on house members gathering here for the session.

As the order was served each member asked if he was being served as an individual or as a legislator. Upon being told the service was in their capacity as legislators each asked the name of Major J. J. McCartney, in charge of the service detail, and then took the names of witnesses to the service. This was regarded as indicating that the way was being paved for court action to test the adjutant-general's authority.

Copies of the order were posted on the house and senate doors.

Despite its issuance, the opinion gained strength tonight that the stage has been set for the attempt tomorrow to convene the extraordinary session at which opponents of Governor J. C. Walton have promised to seek his impeachment.

"Gentleman's Agreement"
Authoritative sources which could not be revealed expressed the belief that a "gentleman's agreement" would prevent any danger of bloodshed.

It was indicated that the refusal of the military to give the legislators access to the chamber would involve nothing more than the formality of a guard officer informing the house members that they were not permitted to enter the doors. Then, it is believed, the representatives will leave the capitol, later assembling at some unannounced location where they will convene and where some of their number probably will be arrested.

This maneuver, it is believed, would be intended to prevent a public spectacle which might invite violence by onlookers not identified with the guard.

It is believed that guard officers even may be informed of the intended location for the second convening.

Reports that he had stated that he knew of no reason why the legislature should not meet in the United States district court room here for the federal buildings were denied tonight by Federal Judge John H. Cottrell.

"We stand where we have always stood; we will meet in the court room," Representative W. D. McBee, of Stephens county, in charge of the session plans, said tonight. "Wednesday noon will find us at the capitol unarmed and unguarded."

Plans for holding a caucus tonight to organize the house were canceled, the legislators deciding to wait until the body is regularly convened before electing officers.

Politics Ruling Governor Walton Declares Dragon

Klan's Position Outlined in Copyrighted Statement for United News.

Editor's Note: To present the side of Governor Walton's dragon course in Oklahoma, N. C. Jewett, grand dragon of the Ku Klux Klan in Oklahoma, and the editor's principal spokesman there, has written the following article for the United News. He advocates the Klan from all blame for the present situation and points to a "recoil-breathing growth in membership" since the trouble began. The United News has asked Governor Walton for a similar outline of his position.

BY N. C. JEWETT, Grand Dragon of the Ku Klux Klan in Oklahoma.

Oklahoma City, Okla., September 25.—Insolent as the knights of the Ku Klux Klan are concerned, nothing has been accomplished by martial law in Oklahoma, except to strengthen their position, despite the fact that it was apparently aimed toward their destruction. We, in common with the vast majority of the citizens of the state, look upon the move as altogether unwarranted, and as nothing more than a spectacular move by which Governor Walton hoped to rebuild his dwindling political fortunes and stave off impeachment proceedings which have been set for several weeks and are due to meet for Wednesday, September 26.

The Knights of the Ku Klux Klan, a lawfully organized, law-abiding, patriotic organization, have been called before a military court of inquiry and question in regard to alleged violations of the law. The knights of the Ku Klux Klan have neither been indicted nor convicted by due process of law, nor is there any reason why it should be, or that they are guilty of any crime, or that they are being indicted and convicted, notwithstanding the libelous statements that have recently been given to the press.

In due season and in proper manner, the Klan will have its day in court, when I trust certain individuals will be brought to book for their maliciously false charges.

In the meantime, the Klan is consistently exhibiting its respect for law and order. Its members will be most careful to do nothing which will in any way either embarrass the military and civil authorities or add to and prolong the disgrace which the Klan certainly did not bring upon the state. We consider our rights as American citizens paramount. It is imperative that all good citizens obey the law in letter and in spirit; but it is equally imperative that all good citizens protect and defend the sacred rights guaranteed by the constitution of the United States.

The governor says he is fighting the Klan. But this is not a Klan fight. It is the affairs of the people of Oklahoma, brought to a definite issue by the legislators of the state, who are called to meet Wednesday and make an effort to restore a republican form of government in Oklahoma.

At that time, the outcome insofar as the people are concerned, will, we believe, be determined. So far as the Ku Klux Klan is concerned, we believe the true character and purpose of the order will, in the future, be better understood than ever before, and that our membership will be greatly increased. This is clearly indicated by the growth in numbers during the past seven days.

ANNEXATION VOTE ON NEXT TUESDAY

tion, must remember that in doing so they are not only defeating the desires of a large section of their own fellow East Pointers, but also the desires of their neighboring towns of College Park and Hapeville, who are said to be anxious for annexation.

Advocates of the annexation move are working hard for the success of their side on Tuesday next. They are pointing out the many advantages which will accrue by becoming a part of Atlanta and are confident that the final count will show an overwhelming victory.

A great mass meeting is to be held at 7:30 o'clock Friday night at Jefferson Park, East Point, to which every interested citizen is invited. Arguments will be made on both sides of the question and an opportunity granted to all those who desire to be heard.

In working for annexation, advocates have pointed out the great material advantages which will accrue to citizens in all three towns, including lower taxes, lower insurance rates, better fire protection, better sanitary conditions, better school facilities, lower light, water and gas bills, better police protection and the like.

Insurance Difference
In the matter of fire insurance rates alone, it is pointed out that the saving to the average merchant, on the basis of Atlanta rates, as compared to the present rates, who carry policies on a store building for $2,000 and on merchandise for $10,000, will be, in East Point, $72 per year in College Park, $109 per year, and in Hapeville, $174 per year.

It is also pointed out that the balance of the quota will be raised with a minimum of time and effort, he said.

TARAFIA BILL PASSES IN CUBAN HOUSE
Havana, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—The railroad and port measure, known as the Tarafia bill, finally passed the house tonight.

The house had concurred in the senate amendment to the original bill and the measure now goes to President Zayas for action.

HARRIS IS INDORSED BY CROWD AT SPARTA
Sparta, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—Senator William J. Harris spoke to a large assemblage of friends at the court house here this morning at 11:30 o'clock. All present gave a rising vote of approval of his state-ship.

The senator told of his work to ameliorate the condition of the farmer, as the prosperity of the country depends upon the farmer, and he told of his efforts in securing the transfer of corps army headquarters from Charleston to Atlanta. An appropriation for the southeastern office of the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce in Atlanta was discussed by him.

Low Tax in Atlanta.
Tax rates at present in East Point and Hapeville are higher than in Atlanta, while in College Park the rate per thousand is the same. It is reported that the assessments are on a much higher basis of actual value. Even under the present assessments, however, the tax in East Point, on a $3,000 assessment, would be $4.50 per year, while in Hapeville it would be $2.50.

It is also pointed out that, under the Atlanta school system children will get thirteen years of free schooling, including kindergartens, while the three towns at present only give eleven years.

Free school books are also provided in Atlanta to all children in the four lower grades this year, and will be provided in the first six grades next year, while no free school books are provided in either of the three places as separate towns.

Eliminate Some Jobs.
The only disadvantage, which, it is said, he maintained under careful investigation, are that some of the merchants in the three towns would have to pay a slightly higher license for the privilege of selling cigars and cigarettes, that the high school children may have to go to Atlanta to school and that some of the present employees under the three separate civic governments may lose their jobs.

To offset this latter, however, it is pointed out that there will undoubtedly be sufficient posts to provide for all competent employees under the ward system, as parts of the city of Atlanta.

Requirements as to registration, in order to be able to vote in the election of Tuesday, are different in the three towns. They are herewith given for each one.

Registration Rules.
In East Point: Citizens must first register for state and county elections at the court house in Atlanta. If the citizen paid last year's county taxes and registered then, he need not do so again at this time.

If the citizen has not registered in East Point since January 1 last, he must go to the city hall in East Point, in take oath that he is qualified to vote.

Mayor for New Approach.
Mayor Walter A. Sims declared that he had no comment to make at this time over the recommendation of the city attorney that the work on the approach be dropped. The mayor, however, reiterated his intention to insist upon the erection of an approach to the Spring street viaduct on Alabama street.

It will probably be next year," asserted Mayor Sims, "before the city will be in position to build the Alabama street approach, but I shall see that this work is carried out. Before it can be started the city must find new quarters for the central fire station."

"I have been assured that the main bridge of the new viaduct will be completed and ready for use by Thanksgiving day."

Chairman's Statements.
Walter G. Cooper, chairman of the viaduct committee of the bond commission, expressed regret at the inability of property owners affected to agree upon the methods for financing the approach. He stated that abandonment of the proposed erection of the approach would work hardship upon all concerned.

"At the urgent request of Hunter street property owners," said Mr.

Cooper, "the viaduct committee of the bond commission and bridge commission of council have worked hard for two years to build the Hunter street approach to the viaduct."

"We consider it a benefit to them and to the public and the bond commission and the mayor and council backed us up. When the property owners couldn't agree among themselves about the right-of-way, they adopted a resolution asking the city to condemn the land and pay for it by a special tax levied on benefited property. The city did that and now some of them have stopped the work."

"We regret this step, as it will work a hardship on all concerned."

Abandonment Not Costly.
Only a small amount has been expended in preliminary work on the approach, this being confined to sinking of several excavations in Hunter street for abutments, and partially tearing away one building immediately adjacent to the viaduct approach, according to Assistant City Attorney Jesse M. Wood.

"If the street committee accepts our recommendation," declared Mr. Wood, "and the work is dropped, the city will be out only a few hundred dollars which have already been expended for preliminary work on the approach."

Speeding Work On Lee's Head In Big Memorial

In an effort to complete the head of General Robert Edward Lee on the perpendicular side of Stone mountain by February 10, the birthday of the leader of the Confederate army, more than 25,000 tons of granite have been removed, it was announced Tuesday by Gutzon Borglum, sculptor, directing the world's biggest memorial work.

Mr. Borglum stated that he would spare no effort to push to completion the head of the southern hero by February 10. Members of the Memorial association said that plans are being made to celebrate General Lee's anniversary at Stone mountain in February.

Chairman A. S. Adams, of the Stone Mountain Memorial association campaign committee, stated Tuesday that while work is steadily going forward on the great memorial, plans were being made to complete Atlanta's quota.

"With half Atlanta's quota of $250,000 already subscribed voluntarily, and with the people of Atlanta thoroughly enthused over the memorial, and though alive to what it will mean to this city, I am confident that the balance of the quota will be raised with a minimum of time and effort," he said.

Rehearing Granted By Supreme Court Reversing Decision

After first refusing a motion for a new trial to R. H. Chance, of Jenkins county, sentenced to life imprisonment on a charge of murder, the state supreme court granted a rehearing and on Tuesday reversed its first decision and allowed the second trial.

Chance was convicted in Bulloch superior court, where the case was heard on a charge of venue, of the killing of Watson Allen on Christmas day, 1921. The case aroused intense feeling in Jenkins county. The prosecution charged that Chance was the leader of a raiding party which fired into Allen's home killing him. The two men, according to record, had been in a dispute over a road.

Grounds upon which the supreme court granted the new trial were that the defendant had not been present throughout his entire trial. The fact was brought out that during the trial, the jury judge and others had left the courtroom to inspect an automobile, offered as an exhibit, and which was parked across the street. The defendant during this time remained in the courtroom in the custody of court officers.

The opinion of the supreme court was not unanimous. Justices Beck and Hines dissenting on the ground that the defendant made no objection at the time he was left in the courtroom, and that his attorneys did not move for a new trial immediately.

Attorneys for Chance were E. K. Overstreet, Anderson & Jones, G. C. Deale, William Woodrum and E. G. Weatherly, while the state was represented by Attorney General George M. Napier, Assistant Attorney General Seward Smith, Solicitor General A. S. Anderson, R. Lee Moore, H. A. Boykin and J. A. Dixon.

Providence Not Cause of Wreck Of Destroyers

Error of Judgment Was Responsible, Says Lieutenant Commander.

San Diego, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—An error in judgment caused the wreck of seven destroyers off Hondo, Cal., September 8, according to Lieutenant Commander Donald T. Hunter, commanding officer of the U. S. S. Delphy, which was leading the column when the destroyer squadron eleven rode into the surf at 20 knots.

He was being cross-questioned by counsel for other defendants and had just finished citing an unseasonable northerly current and the type of radio compass used at Point Arguello as the "real causes" of the destroyer disaster when he was interrupted by Admiral W. V. Pratt, senior member of the court.

"Do you mean to say that the wreck was an act of Providence," asked the admiral, "or an error in judgment?"

"I'll have to admit that it was an error in judgment," replied the witness. Then, after a long pause: "But as contributory causes I believe the unusual northerly current we encountered near Point Arguello and the fact that a bilateral radio compass is used there were partly responsible."

"I think there is also a possibility that abnormal currents caused by the Japanese earthquake might have been another contributory cause, or magnetic disturbances connected with the solar eclipse affecting the compass, but of these I cannot, of course, speak with any first hand knowledge."

NATIONALIST MOVEMENT CAUSES SOME ANXIETY.

Paris, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—The political situation in Germany as the aftermath of the decision to abandon passive resistance in the Ruhr is being watched by the French government with some anxiety in view of the possibilities of a nationalist movement, such as one tending to separate Bavaria from the reich; the outbreak of military bolshevism in Prussia and fresh impetus to the separatist movement in the Rhineland. Should serious disturbances of any sort arise in the Ruhr, it is thought they would most certainly have the result of increasing the number of Rhinelanders desiring to assure continuation of their tranquillity by separation.

The allied troops, it is asserted in official circles, will not be allowed to take sides in any conflict, as in the absence of other military force responsibility rests upon them for the maintenance of order in the occupied territory. There is good reason for the conclusion that the French attribute little importance to the separatist movement, but that they will not intervene to prevent the inhabitants from taking any action they see fit, so long as order is not disturbed.

See New Regime.

In the event the cessation of passive resistance is not attended by violent outbreaks, the allies will, it is assumed here, be faced at once with the necessity of providing for a new regime of occupation.

The hypothesis is that the industrial leaders of the Ruhr, freed from the restrictive policies of the Berlin government will repeat the promises made at the beginning of the occupation, to pay the coal tax demanded by the occupation authorities and to cooperate with them.

It is anticipated that the German government, pending final settlement of the new terms for the payment of reparations will ask that the expelled functionaries be allowed to return to the Ruhr, that the imprisoned industrial magnates, including Dr. Krupp von Bohlen, be released and that the rigors of the occupation be lessened.

Information gleaned from official circles here indicates there will be no stout objection to a change in the occupational regime, and that the French government is willing to rid it as far as possible of its disagreeable features. The return of the German functionaries, however, is a more serious matter, since most of them are Prussians, and it is feared by the allies, are likely to raise new forms of obstruction.

Clemency Good Policy.

Clemency toward those Germans imprisoned is regarded as certain to follow a show of good will by the German government in execution of its obligations, and a disposition on the part of the industrial leaders to cooperate with the allies.

The difficulties before the allies under a new regime in the Ruhr, which are being dwelt on here, are the necessity of keeping the district supplied with food and in finding markets for the exports, which latter task is complicated in the future by the cost of production in Germany now equals the cost elsewhere, while the stocks of raw materials and accurate figures of fuel are exhausted. It is remarked in French circles, however, that the idea is not to take over the task of exploitation, but on the contrary, since the passive resistance is ending, to leave it in the hands of the Germans.

Premier Poincare, it is understood, will also favor leaving it to the Germans to decide what reforms are required to put their finances in order and how to make ready to pay reparations, reserving it to the reparations commission simply to supervise the working of those reforms and report whether they are sufficient to accomplish the end in view.

Until the change in the German financial reforms is known, the French government will maintain an expectant attitude, reserving its opposition to the new regime in Germany until it appears clearly whether there is a real "change of heart" on the part of the Germans regarding their obligations. If such change has taken place, then it is thought here the other steps toward a reasonable settlement of the reparations question will be comparatively easy.

NO DISTURBANCE CAUSED BY CHANGE IN POLICY.

Dusseldorf, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—The decision of the Berlin government to cease passive resistance in the Ruhr and the Rhineland thus far has not produced a ripple of disturbance among the population of the Ruhr.

Notwithstanding leading editorialists in the German newspapers, even as late as Monday, predicting that there would be a spontaneous outbreak of disorder if passive resistance were abandoned unconditionally, the news of its actual abandonment could not have produced a more undramatic effect.

As to whether the lack of visible excitement was due to stupefaction caused by the abruptness of the Berlin government's decision, or whether the population generally fully realized that passive resistance already had petered out on its own accord, opinion of the leading German newspapers was divided. Some of today's newspapers declared that the government's decision was the only thing to be done and that it was really "the natural course of events."

FORD MAY ABANDON SHOALS PROJECT

department, was said to feel that the remaining property built by the government during the war was quite an attractive proposition for Mr. Ford's purposes now as before the Gorgas plant passed from government ownership.

The Gorgas plant, in the opinion of the president and also of administration officials generally, really has no connection with the Muscle Shoals project, inasmuch as it is located some seventy miles from the Muscle Shoals waterpower site and also is a steam power plant, which is not vitally essential to Mr. Ford's purposes.

Little Use to Ford. In emphasizing this view a high administration official said the Gorgas plant bore about the same relation to Muscle Shoals as the stem of an apple does to an apple after the fruit has been taken from the tree. The plant, it was explained, would undoubtedly be useful to Mr. Ford during development of waterpower at Muscle Shoals, but it could be duplicated by Mr. Ford on properties covered by his offer for probably a million dollars.

The government in disposing of the Gorgas plant, it was further explained, had no option in view of the attorney general's recent ruling against attempting to stay on the power company's property beyond the expiration of the lease.

Sale yesterday by the government to the Alabama Power company of the Gorgas steam power plant, transmission line and other accessories located upon its property was consummated, Representative Oliver, democrat, Alabama, stated today, only after he had presented to Secretary Weeks what he considered conclusive evidence that the notice given by the power company for the sale or removal of the property was illegal.

Delay Is Urged. Declaring that the attorney general when he delivered his opinion holding that the government must respect the notice given it by the power company had not this information before him, Representative Oliver urged Secretary Weeks, he said, to delay action until the attorney general could consider the new aspect of the case. Secretary Weeks was so much impressed with the statement he presented, Mr. Oliver asserted, that he asked the power company to extend the time in which the government could give its decision. This request, Mr. Oliver said, was refused by the power company. Representative Oliver said he pointed out to Secretary Weeks that the power company had a contract with the government to supply it with electrical current from the Gorgas plant which could not be canceled without the government's consent until after June 30, 1924.

"It was a fake for the Alabama Power company to insist," Representtative Oliver declared he told Secretary Weeks, "that the government decide to sell or remove the Gorgas plant from its lands. The contract with the government which Secretary Weeks seemed, from my conversation with him, to agree had not been brought to the attention of the attorney general, not only recognized the right of the government to retain the Gorgas plant upon the property of the Alabama Power company until the end of next June, but guaranteed that the power company would operate the plant until that time and furnish the government electric current generated there. Under this contract the government could not, in my judgment, have elected to remove the plant and under it the company could not have forced the government to sell."

The sale of the Gorgas plant will not, in Mr. Oliver's opinion, cause Henry Ford to withdraw from the Muscle Shoals project. "Mr. Ford and his friends," Mr. Oliver said, "will see to it that neither the Alabama Power company nor any interest allied with that company get Muscle Shoals and thus destroy the hopes of the farmers for relief for its foreign supply of nitrates."

Products Must Get To A Market Before They Become Valuable

The value of any product, whether from farm or factory, depends upon its being taken to the place where there are people who need that particular product and are willing to pay the right price for it.

Coal lying in the ground; cotton growing in the field; steel at the foundry; lumber at the mill; fruit on the trees; corn in the shock; tobacco in the warehouse and cement at the plant—all have little real value until they are transported to where there is a market for them.

Diamonds are worth no more than cobble stones until they are taken to the people who are ready and willing to exchange dollars for them.

The Louisville & Nashville Railroad performs a valuable service for the farms and factories of the thirteen states in which it operates by carrying their products to important markets and to Southern ports for shipment to the consuming nations of the world.

Manufactured Products, Steel, Iron, Coal, Machinery, Lumber, Cotton, Tobacco, Corn, Potatoes, Melons, Fresh Vegetables, Butter, Eggs, Sea Food and the many other things, produced throughout the great Southland, are carried to market by the L. & N.

The prosperous condition of the territory served by the L. & N. has largely been brought about by the excellent service rendered by this railroad in getting the products of the farms and factories to the markets.

RAIN BADLY NEEDED IN VICINITY OF ROME

Rome, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—Continued dry weather is playing havoc with gardens and truck farms in Floyd and adjoining counties, according to farmers who patronize the local curb market. It has been almost two months since there has been a general rain in this section and truck gardens are heavy sufferers, although watermelons, Irish potatoes and late corn crops are also badly in need of rain.

With rain now, the truck crops in this section will be by far the best northwest Georgia has ever known, it is said.

Alabama Day at Fair.

Rome, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—Alabama Day, the annual county fair was provided for at a meeting of former Alabamians and fair promoters this morning. A committee of former residents of that state, headed by O. P. Williamson, will invite Governor Brandon to be here on the day selected. Reports from the fair indicate that it will be an unusually large number of people are coming to Rome from this section and it is in recognition of this fact that it has been decided to set aside a special day in their honor.

Howard Theater Shows Mountain Highways Built

Included in its program for this week, the Howard theater is showing scenes taken in the Blue Ridge mountains of North Georgia, where the state highway department is constructing permanent roads under natural difficulties which have seldom been equalled in the history of road construction.

The pictures, which follow the regular news reel, were taken by Tracy Mathewson, staff photographer for The Constitution, and they illustrate, as words cannot, the problems which the engineers and road builders in the employ of the state have to contend with in their task of opening up the glorious mountain regions of north Georgia to the tourist, and bringing the blessings of modern civilization to the dwellers in the rude mountain cabins.

Deep gorges, wooded mountains, lofty peaks and shadowed valleys cover the terrain through which these highways are to pass.

Deep within the sombre woods the surveyors set up their levels and transits. Far across a valley, upon the side of a companion mountain, another engineer signals and, as their work is watched, the mind builds in imagination the great causeway which will someday link these primitive woodlands with the tremendous highway system which is steadily being pushed toward completion in every county of the state.

Through these pictures we catch a glimpse of the highland citizens of Georgia, virtually cut off by lack of transportation from the rest of the world, for generations. Today they stand in wonder watching the giant steam shovels scooping out the earth to make a road, and the blasts of giant powder which rend and tear the impeding rocks out of the way.

The coming of these perfect roads to north Georgia will mean not only an added opportunity to witness the glorious beauty of wild nature, for the holiday-maker and the tourist, but it will bring opportunities undreamed of in the past to the very doorways of these dwellings in the backwoods, in whose veins flows the blood of the finest ancestry in America.

Four Indictments Justified in Case of Mrs. W. E. D. Stokes

Chicago, September 25.—Representatives of the state's attorney today declared they proposed to take Richard Westbrooks, a negro attorney, and Mille Phillips, a negro and a hair dresser, before the grand jury in connection with an investigation of charges by Mrs. Helen Elwood Stokes that her husband, W. E. D. Stokes, of New York, and his agents had sought to besmirch her reputation.

Difficulty in persuading Westbrooks and the negroes to testify at informal sessions caused the state's attorney's investigators to decide to take them before the grand jury in an effort to loosen their tongues.

Although Assistant State's Attorney Wharton had said he considered the evidence thus far obtained as a result of Mrs. Stokes' charges, warranted indictment of at least four persons.

Thomas Marshall, indictment expert, said today he had not been able to go over the information sufficiently to say whether grand jury hearing was warranted.

MAN BADLY BURNED WHEN FUMES IGNITE

Griffin, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—John Allen, Griffin cafe operator, is in a hospital here suffering from severe burns sustained Monday night when he struck a match at a gasoline filling station, igniting the fumes. With his clothing aflame, Allen ran down the street until he was caught by a negro man, who extinguished the fire in the garments. Doctors say Allen will recover.

Coart's Attorneys Prepare New Appeal To Supreme Court

Attorneys for Major Lee H. Coart, former army officer, under a life sentence for the slaying of A. B. McNeice, Talbot county school superintendent, in October, 1921, were busy engaged Tuesday in preparing plans for filing a motion for a rehearing of Coart's petition for new trial denied by the state supreme court Monday.

The motion for rehearing of the petition will more than likely be filed before Saturday, as a new term of the court opens Monday, it was stated by counsel for the defendant. Should the rehearing be denied, Coart will begin serving his sentence at once.

Major Coart's trial was one of the most sensational in the history of Georgia, attracting national interest. The defense contended that the former army officer killed McNeice about the former's wife, while the state charged that defendant killed McNeice about the latter's wife.

The opinion handed down by the state supreme court was one of the most voluminous issued in many years.

MULE SECRETS BARED

"Never Try to Pull One," Says U. S. Expert.

A mule is a mule and must be recognized and treated as a mule. This is the observation made by an author of the United States department of agriculture on mules.

"There is a wrong way and a right way to lead a mule," says the expert. "A man who looks at a mule and lugs at his head will never make progress."

"A mule will not be pulled. He will usually follow quietly, however, if a man will walk away in the direction he desires to go. Neither can you 'bully' mules into going through tight places; they are somewhat like sheep, and if the leader can be induced to go the rest will follow."

The official statement received here did not outline the "inducements" but stated the complete bulletin could be obtained by writing the department in Washington.

"The ability of mules to endure hardships and perform service under adverse conditions has established them firmly in American agriculture, which is shown by the fact that sales for farm work increased from 4,209,769 in 1910, to 5,432,391, in 1920, or nearly 30 per cent," according to the statement.

MASONIC LUNCH TODAY

Old-Time "Spelling-Bee" to Feature Program.

An old-fashioned "spelling-bee" conducted by Superintendent of Schools Willis A. Sutton, will feature the regular weekly luncheon of the Masonic club to be held today at 12:30 o'clock at the Peacock cafe. A suitable prize will be awarded the winner of the contest, the committee in charge of the entertainment announced Tuesday.

Arthur Falkenburg and Forrest Traylor have arranged a companion program to be given during the luncheon. Members are urged to attend the meeting of the club "all loaded with fresh ammunition from the old Blue Back spelling book." There will be other interesting features on the program, according to plans.

CONVERTS ARE WON BY BIBLE PROMISE

A large number of conversions resulted Tuesday night at the Walt Holcomb "old fashioned revival" being held at Wesley Memorial church, when Mr. Holcomb used as his text what he called "the only complete question in the Bible bearing on personal salvation."

The question was taken from Acts 12:30: "What must I do to be saved?" Mr. Holcomb stated that the only complete and full answer to that question is found in Acts 20:21: "Repentance toward God and faith toward our Lord Jesus Christ."

"Many places in the Bible, one will find partial questions and partial answers regarding personal salvation," stated Mr. Holcomb, "but the foregoing are the only two pieces of Scripture where the whole situation is completely covered."

Tuesday night was featured by a large attendance from Baraca and Philothea classes of the city.

Mr. Holcomb announced that Mrs. A. B. Cunyus, of Cartersville, Ga., world famous revival soloist, will be featured at the noonday Arcade service as well as the meeting tonight.

Witness Creates Sensation in Greek Outrage Hearing

London, September 25.—An Albanian shepherd, testifying before the international committee of inquiry at Janina into the massacre of General Tellini and his suite, created a sensation, says the Exchange Telegraph dispatch from Athens when he declared that the Albanian governor of Argirokastro asked him some time before the crime if he would undertake to "assassinate a mission."

General Tellini and his brother officers were members of the inter-allied mission delimiting the Greco-Albanian frontier.

Merchants Using Telegrams While Pressmen Strike

New York, September 25.—Advertising by telegram is the latest device to be adopted by New York merchants in an effort to beat the pressmen's strike which has curtailed display advertising in the reduced-size newspapers.

Charge account customers of one of the largest retail mercantile establishments here received telegrams Tuesday advising them that business was going on in the shopping district as usual and please come in for a glance at the snappy bargains. Also please tell your friends and neighbors, the telegrams suggested, lest any of them thought the stores had stopped functioning.

Merchants privately estimate a loss in trade of nearly 50 per cent since the newspaper pressmen went on strike.

Promise of relief was brighter Tuesday, however, when pressmen recruits began to arrive in response to the urgent appeal of international officers.

SALVATION ARMY SETS "BUNDLE DAY" TO AID JAPANESE

Salvation Army officials have designated Tuesday, October 2, as official "Bundle Day" for collecting clothing and cloth which may be made into clothing for victims in the recent Japanese earthquake disaster, according to announcement Tuesday. It is the purpose of the organization to collect worn or discarded clothing in large quantities and to ship it to Japan as soon as possible.

In order to expedite the collection of the articles, William Akers, secretary of the King Hardware company, has offered the use of ten of the chain of stores located in convenient sections of the city, as places where bundles can be sent. This will relieve donors of articles of the necessity of making trips to army headquarters to deliver them.

The following places have been designated as receiving stations: Peachtree at Tenth street; 34 Gordon street, West End; 145 Moreland avenue, at "Little Five Points;" 10 Roswell road, at Buckhead; 772 Marietta street, at Jones avenue; 202 Marietta street, 202 Peters street, 122 Decatur street, and 135 Whitehall.

ASK EXTRADITION OF GEORGIA MEN

Columbus, S. C., September 25.—Governor Thomas G. McLeod late today announced his decision to request Governor Clifford M. Walker, of Georgia, to grant extradition papers for Frank H. Barrett, Julian Barrett and Thomas Barrett, Jr., members of the defunct Augusta, Ga., cotton firm of Barrett & Co., on charges of "obtaining property by false pretense."

The warrant for the arrest of the three Barretts was sworn out on August 11 by J. C. Lybrand, in Aiken county, charging that they had defrauded C. R. Lybrand, his brother of Wagener, S. C., out of $13,007 by representing to him that the Barrett firm could handle his cotton more profitably than other firms, although they knew that the company was then insolvent. The request for extradition papers was made on August 17, and a hearing was held before Governor McLeod on August 20.

Why Haulers Prefer GMC Trucks

"Your Mr. J. C. Cameron, after several visits to Bristol, finally sold us our first GMC 2-ton truck in July, 1922, and the main reason for our considering the GMC was the two-range transmission and removable spare motor, and the fact that the City of Bristol, Va., has been operating a 2 1/2-ton for over eight years. Since buying the first GMC last July we have bought two more 2-ton. We could not ask any truck to give better service than we are getting from our GMC's. Our upkeep has been less than on any other truck we have ever operated."

INTERSTATE TRANSFER CO.,

The surplus power delivered for hard pulls, and the economy effected by the GMC Two-Range transmission are unequalled in the trucking world. NOTHING TO FEAR.—Thou canst not be afraid.—Ezekiel 2:6.

FOR GREATER ATLANTA.

The qualified voters of East Point, College Park and Hapeville will vote respectively Tuesday, October 2, on whether or not each municipality in question shall be merged with the municipality of Atlanta.

These elections are to be held pursuant to and in accordance with an act of the recent general assembly amending the charter of the city of Atlanta.

Under the provisions, and by reason of the fact that East Point, College Park and Hapeville are situated beyond and adjacent to East Point, the voters of College Park and Hapeville may register unanimous approval of the merger, but unless the voters of East Point shall do the same thing their votes will have been cast in vain.

On the other hand, if East Point should favor the merger and the other two municipalities should not, then East Point would become a part of the city of Atlanta, while the others would remain separate incorporations as they are today.

It is obvious, therefore, that East Point holds the key to the situation, and the fight of the anti-merger element in all of these suburban towns is being concentrated upon the East Point voters.

It is practically assured that College Park and Hapeville voters will overwhelmingly favor the merger. It is essential, therefore, that the progressive element that sees in this opportunity for a greater Atlanta, also greater land values, greater municipal developments, greater city advantages, greater industrial and commercial and financial opportunities for each of the present separate suburbs, should bend every energy possible in bringing the East Point pro-merger vote to the polls.

When viewed dispassionately and with progressive thought and a broad vision, it is difficult to see how any resident of either of these suburbs can object to the merger proposal.

In all social, business and financial ways, by reason of their proximity, these suburbs are today a part of Atlanta; and yet, by reason of separate municipalities, necessarily much weaker because of their comparative smallness, they are denied the advantages of the great municipal services of Atlanta.

These enlarged services are now offered to these suburban residents, on an equal basis with the Atlanta residents, and with an actual saving to these suburban residents in the costs of taxes, insurance, lights, water, gas and other city assessments.

It may be claimed that the occupation or privilege taxes—the licenses—for business will be higher through the existing Atlanta schedule.

This in some cases is true; in others the Atlanta fees are lower than those charged by these smaller governments.

Assuming that they are higher on the whole, the general acceleration to business, by being in the city of Atlanta, will far more than offset any marginal license increase. And the economies in other essentials for business, particularly insurance; and the greatly increased protection services, in fire, police, city planning, street cleaning, health, etc., due to the strength of Atlanta's resources, will infinitely more than offset the license increases.

Schools, and public educational facilities, are always matters of deepest concern, and in this respect the appeal for the merger is peculiarly strong.

The Atlanta course, from primary through high school, is two years longer than those of the suburban municipalities, and when it is considered that Atlanta taxes are even lower, the advantages of this may be best appreciated.

Any objection to merger on the theory of "losing identity" is untenable. Each of these municipalities would become a separate ward, with full representation in the general council, this being a decided advantage because it would give these suburbs, really a part of Atlanta in all but government and government service, a voice in the municipal affairs of Atlanta, including the location of schools, etc.

There are no better arguments in favor of merger than the examples of West End, Kirkwood and Oak-land.

When they were separate municipalities their public services were necessarily restricted, and this in turn was reflected in real estate values, building activities, schools, and all material things that go to make cities great and prosperous.

Since their merger into Atlanta they have become powerful and potential sections of the city, with every advantage, enormously increased populations, greatly increased property values, and quickened to the throbbing, vibrant spirit of Atlanta that means so much to residents of Atlanta.

Atlanta will warmly welcome these suburban municipalities, not in the sense of annexation, but in the broader and more ideal sense of becoming a part of Atlanta, with full measures of advantages, responsibilities and pride of citizenship.

PEACE FOR EUROPE?

The complete surrender of Germany in its passive resistance to the French occupation of the Ruhr will mean a quick settlement of the reparations dispute, and the industrial rehabilitation of both France and Germany, provided, first, the French leaders does not prevail in any serious attempt to restore industrial peace on continental Europe; and provided, second, the United States enters cooperatively with other nations in arranging an international loan for Germany so that she may revise and standardize her currency and open her markets.

All of this depends necessarily upon the sincerity of the German people, under the Stresemann regime, to meet her honest obligations, and to seriously begin the restitution of her broken resources in an honest manner, with sacred governmental intentions to show herself worthy of international confidence and help.

It is most gratifying to note a conciliatory attitude on the part of France, and an equally frank, democratic position taken by the Stresemann cabinet.

Great Britain has contributed materially to the surrender of Germany and the lifting of the military pressure in the Ruhr, and its diplomacy in treating with the German premier has been of a high order. The relieved situation reestablishes the amity of the entente, and goes a far way in lifting other ruinous clouds that have hung menacingly over the world.

While this government has had no part in the negotiations, although the chief beneficiary of any amicable settlement, other than the nations at issue, it is obvious that she cannot escape her responsibility in helping to reestablish a credit for Germany, by which trade relations and economic betterments may follow diplomacy.

RETURN OF GONZALES.

William E. Gonzales, who was editor-in-chief of the Columbia (S. C.) State from 1903 to 1913, and who has been in the diplomatic service for the past thirteen years, is to take up the editorship that he laid down when President Wilson first called him to the ambassadorship in Cuba.

During the ten years of absence of William E. Gonzales the State has been most ably edited by William W. Ball, who was managing editor at the time of his elevation to the chief position. Mr. Ball recently resigned to accept a position as dean of Journalism in the University of South Carolina. There is not a deeper thinker or a more forceful writer on the southern press, and his long editorial career has been distinguished by a dignified conservatism that has been as refreshing as it has been inspiring.

Mr. Gonzales, who will again take up the editorial duties, belongs to a family of nationally distinguished newspapermen and authors. He is aggressive, progressive, fearless, fluent and forceful, and his return to the State at this time will give him a greater field for usefulness than ever before.

The Columbia State is one of the south's leading daily papers, clean, dependable, aggressive and ably edited in every department.

The old earth isn't different. It is now blaming all its earthquake troubles on the moon.

The simple life is all in theory. It is no going when a hungry man has an aristocratic bill-of-fare appetite.

Sensible fellows, those Coolidge boys. They know how to make hay while the sun shines.

It is the season of presidential booms, when many will think they are called and later have speeches of acceptance to burn.

Mr. Dempsey can't afford to retire, with another million-dollar return match in sight.

The winds are out with the waves at play,
And I shall not tempt the sea today.

"The trail is narrow, the wood is dim,

And the lion's whelps are abroad at play,
And I shall not join in the chase today.

"But the ship sailed safely over the sea,
And the hunters came from the chase in glee;
And the town that was builded upon a rock
Was swallowed up in the earthquake shock."

Some Solid Doctrine
From a Solid Man

Editor Constitution: Everybody knows how to run a newspaper except the fellow who has to pay for it. Some people think the way to stop negro migration from Georgia is for the newspapers to say nothing about it. But that won't work. Suppression of information seldom helps any cause. My idea is that information enables the people to know the actual status of affairs, and they can then intelligently proceed to solve the problem.

Negroes leave Georgia primarily because the influx of foreign labor at the north has been stopped. Southern factories have been forced to take on the southern negro as a laborer.

The southern negro would not have been so easily persuaded if he had been permitted to see the negroes at the north. He is a subject that concerns all of us, because if 40 per cent of our population is entitled away, we shall thrive and divide in greater ratio than is now the case.

I believe you can help the negro if you will give special attention to the work done under the direction of Phil Campbell of the State College of Agriculture. He has a corps of negro farm demonstrators at work throughout the state, improving the production of negro farmers and thus enabling them to become more prosperous. To carry stories in your paper of negroes who have been conspicuously successful in their efforts will inspire other negroes with the confidence that they, too, can do well, and possibly get their names into the paper which, by the way, is a great incentive even to white people.

Phil Campbell is sending out bulletins monthly which contain items of special interest to negroes, if not to the entire community. I am taking the liberty of urging you to give these bulletins attention and reprint items that you may think of special interest.

CHAPTER XIII.—CAN AUSTRIA LIVE?

By John F. Sinclair

The league of nations in attempting to rebuild the shattered economic system of the little republic of Austria, has undertaken the most far-reaching piece of construction work she has so far attempted to do.

The peace of St. Germain cut Austria to pieces. Trade lines built up through the labor of hundreds of years were hopelessly broken. Her territory was reduced from 261,000 square miles to 33,000 square miles. Her population shrank from 6,000,000 in 1914 to 3,500,000 today. The politicians, in carving Austria to pieces, took no account of economic life in their folly and madness.

The situation made even more difficult by the very size of Vienna. This great city of two million of people had been built up by being the very center of the cultural, educational, business and social life of Central Europe for a thousand years. Today Austria, covering an area as large as Maine, is hemmed in by countries who will only sell goods to her C. O. D.

Dr. Michael Hainisch, the fine old president of Austria, and an agricultural professor, told me that the land of his country was producing about one-fifth of the amount of food needed by her people to live. Four-fifths must be bought outside. After years of intense cultivation of all the available land, the president thought about one-third of the food needed in Austria can be raised within. Sixty-five per cent of her food must always be purchased outside Austria.

What an impractical and impossible economic unit for politicians to carve out. It is like cutting the heart out of a person, putting it on a platter and expecting it to continue to function.

Here's the way the Austrian heart on the platter of civilization functioned: In metric tons (1000 omitted):

	1919	1920	1921
Imports	2,069,602	6,092,817	8,175
Exports	490	1,318	1,477

Imports, bal. 1,568,474,448,698
If we translate the figures into dollars, we find that Austria bought 150 millions of dollars more goods in 1920 than she sold, and 127 millions more in 1921, and 110 millions more in 1922.

Heavy Borrower. But she had to live. To pay these huge bills, she had some outside resources. She had some tourist travel profits but probably not enough to cover 20 per cent of the deficit.

She had 73 millions of dollars pledged by her state monopolies and her revenues. She spent every cent of it. Her condition got steadily worse. Money was going down in value every day. Prices were rising. She was unable to balance her budget. Her expenses far exceeded her receipts.

In 1919-20, her expenditures were 2,000 millions of kronas, and her receipts 1,800 millions of kronas and her receipts at 6,200 kronas, less than one-third of her public debt. This is Austria's real difficulty. Can she support herself? Can she pay her way?

No financial scheme, however complete, can solve the problem for Austria. She must in the final analysis earn as much with her exports as she purchases plus the interest charges on her foreign debt. The problem is to find a way to obtain a surplus.

The loaning of money to Austria will not keep Austria from collapse, unless she can pay by her excess of exports. The use of a national interest charges on her borrowings.

Can she do it? The league of nations has helped her over the first hurdle but the other hurdles are much harder to get over.

Knotty Problem. I cannot say Austria's problem is insoluble though, in my opinion, several hundred millions of dollars will not make it any easier to increase her industrial activities sufficiently to enable her to pay her imports and interest charges and live.

What I do say is that in addition to the huge sums of money now being loaned to Austria, there must be industrial expansion, the recovery of Austria cannot take place without an immediate restoration of the industrial life of Europe and especially of those countries of central Europe who are her neighbors and customers—Hungary, Germany, Russia and the Balkans.

More even than Great Britain, Italy and Belgium, Austria must have European markets to pay her way. The time is coming when she will be a heavy one. Another European war—or even a localized Balkan affair—would leave Austria an economic disaster.

Austria too must join hands with the other nations of Europe who know that modern industrial and modern agriculture are deadly enemies. Will the world throw into discord?

"Who Should Be the Greatest?"
While on the way to Capernaum Jesus and his disciples got apart. While He strode along they talked behind His back. They were wrangling. Being seated in the Guest House at Capernaum Christ asked what they were disputing about. They were speaking of Him. His presence something told them their thoughts were unworthy, undignified and un-Christ-like.

Jesus rebuked His unselfishness upon their selfishness. You were disputing over "who should be the greatest?" In My kingdom, said Jesus, the greatest shall be the lowest. He placed not to serve, but to swell, puff and blow.

He reversed their thoughts. He told a little child and set him in the midst and said, "Be like him—unselfish, unselfish and good. This is the way to greatness—greatness through goodness. Service is the keynote to greatness. Christianity isn't mere individualistic, but collective and community wide. This is one of Jesus' political teachings on greatness through service to others."

Plan of Action.
What is he trying to do? His job is to make a living economic unit out of a shattered economic wreck. Here is his plan of action:

(1) To establish a new bank of issue—based on gold.
(2) To balance government receipts and expenditures by July, 1924.
(3) To secure a foreign loan of $125,000,000 to pay the deficits in running the government up to July, 1924.

To stop further printing of unsecured paper kronas and thereby restore stability to the money and confidence in the future of Austria. Dr. Zimmermann has been in Austria nine months. What has he done?

The new gold bank of issue opened its doors in January of this year with a paid-up capital of $250,000. Its day its gold reserve is equal to 30 per cent of its bank notes and deposits.

Government expenditures are being reduced; 35,000 government employees have been dropped. Departments are being merged.

Dr. Zimmermann told me that by July 1, 1924, he believed the government receipts and expenditures will balance. The foreign loan of $125,000,000, which the United States has agreed to loan, has been raised. This will take care of the government deficit until July 1, 1924.

Stop Printing Money.
The printing of more unsecured paper kronas stopped on November 18, 1922. The kronas since then have been established at 71,000 for one dollar. That is the important thing to know. That next month or the next the money will not fluctuate either up or down. Savings bank deposits have increased 500 per cent during the past three months. Confidence is returning to the country.

The most serious problem is that of the increase of unemployment. There are twice as many men out of work as there were six months ago. It has become a real menace. It is useless to balance the budget without at the same time promoting a healthy and active economy. This is Austria's real difficulty. Can she support herself? Can she pay her way?

No financial scheme, however complete, can solve the problem for Austria. She must in the final analysis earn as much with her exports as she purchases plus the interest charges on her foreign debt. The problem is to find a way to obtain a surplus.

SHORT AGE OF GUARD MATERIAL WORRYING ALEXANDER

Low Silver Winner in Ring Battle With Joey Fox

English Feather No Match For Atlantan, Being Loser From Start of 10-Rounder

Baby Stribling and Young Roberts Fight To Draw and Kid Huckleberry Is Given Draw With Cliff Jones.

BY CLIFF WHEATLEY.

If Low Silver's problem of gaining a ring crown that means something is as easy to solve as grabbing off one that rates high as a nickel with a Broadway spender, he should amount to something in the art of his hand-to-hand combat. This was not even hard pressed last night at the auditorium in defeating Joey Fox, reputed to be the holder of the British featherweight title, all the way in their ten-round embroilment.

Silver never had an easier fight. His opponent was perfectly harmless so far as sudden termination of the bout for the Atlantan was concerned. Joey was, however, very fast, which enabled him to steer clear of Low's fists. This speed he combined with cleverness that at times aided him in launching futile offensive moves and he was rugged enough to stand up under the hardest blows Silver landed.

It was not the greatest fight Silver has staged. If Low had fought at the pace which marked his recent starts here and in other cities of the south, Joey never would have gone the distance, for he was severely rocked by Silver's slashing drives to body, whenever the latter succeeded in landing them. But, through it all, Silver declined to follow up his openings and lapsed quickly into sluggish fighting, broken only now and then by spasmodic bursts of the campaigning that would have finished his man had the Atlantan stuck to his knitting.

Silver had to watch out for a quick left jab, which carried no steam behind it, whereas Fox was compelled to be careful only of wicked drives which would land him in a bad way. Low's change of pace was brought into action but once. The rest of the time he was merely swinging wildly with no particular landing spot selected for his wallop. This usually isn't his way of doing things.

Hit Stride in Sixth. He hit his true stride in the sixth round and the bet looked good that he would win by a knockout in less than two frames, but Silver, after a brief display of some of the tricks he carries in his bag, went back to waving the sort of combat which he and the Englishman escaped paying the toll that should have been exacted, for it will ever be this writer's belief that Silver should have won by a clean knockout.

Each used lefts extensively. Fox apparently had few weapons more effective and Silver was content to let things rock along, seldom calling upon his right unless the opening was as big as the Candler building. The British entry is a very small target for a left-hander and Silver began calling his nice-right into action too late to create a lot of damage. Fox was cautious because he should have been and Silver paid the price of a fighter who could not have hurt him had he used a crowbar.

A right cross which Fox uncorked in the first round led many to believe the Englishman would use this too frequently, but toward the middle of the bout he seldom brought it out. He resorted frequently to it, however, in the ninth and tenth and copped the ninth. Silver being caught unprepared for this trick. The cross proved harmless in the tenth, but it literally swept Fox off his feet with a whirlwind attack.

The First Round. After a bad start in the first round Fox succeeded in making up the lost ground by a magnificent rally in the first round. Silver opened with a series of lefts to the jaw which did no more than take the Englishman's mind off the fact that possibly Silver had a right in the fight.

To realize quickly that Silver possessed something else, for the round had not gone farther than the half-way mark before Low popped a right to Joey's jaw. This sent Fox inside and he scored some points by clever work at close range, showing a marked superiority over Silver in this respect. The round was about even, Silver taking a smashing punch to the face when Fox sent over a right cross. Fox was extremely cautious in the rounder between Young Roberts, of second and Silver stepped off to the lead. Low feinted in an effort to make Joey lead and failing in this sent a right to the jaw. This had the desired effect and Fox opened up considerably. He was greeted with a number of left jabs and then took a resounding whack on the jaw. Rapidly Low shot a left to the body and Fox retaliated by driving in some wallop to the same spot. Silver landed a right jolt to the jaw just as the bell rang.

Silver shaded in the third, but his margin was nothing big. He landed a right to the body for the starter and Fox came back with some just as hard, and directed at Low's midsection. Silver brought up a hard right during a clinch and Fox backed away, hurt considerably. The party was becoming a wee bit rough and the crowd began taking much interest in the proceedings. Silver missed a left swing by at least a foot, but got in a nice right to the stomach during the infighting which was going on at the bell.

Silver Wins Another. Silver made it three rounds in a row by copping the fourth. He came out back with some just as hard, and directed at Low's midsection. Silver brought up a hard right during a clinch and Fox backed away, hurt considerably. The party was becoming a wee bit rough and the crowd began taking much interest in the proceedings. Silver made it three rounds in a row by copping the fourth. He came out back with some just as hard, and directed at Low's midsection. Silver brought up a hard right during a clinch and Fox backed away, hurt considerably. The party was becoming a wee bit rough and the crowd began taking much interest in the proceedings. Silver missed a left swing by at least a foot, but got in a nice right to the stomach during the infighting which was going on at the bell.

DAVIDSON TO PLAY FRIDAY

Davidson, N. C., September 25.—(Special.)—There has been no let-up in training by the coaches of the Davidson Wildcats varsity football squad this week, in spite of the fact that the Elton game last Saturday ended the early training period which began September 1. The usual extra hard workouts and scrimmages between varsity and substitutes, varsity and freshmen are being held each afternoon.

The Presbyterian college of South Carolina is to meet at Rock Hill Friday and much interest is being shown in the game on the part of the local student body. Although the battle is a hundred miles away from the campus and the game is not a student-body affair, many Davidson men are planning to make the trip.

The backfield ran well last week and of a certain department of the 1923 varsity would be named as superior to others, the charging halves and fullbacks would get the credit. Hendrix, quarterback, Black and Shepard, halfbacks, and DeArmon, fullback, started the game against the Christians last week and they will be in the lineup against P. C. Six substitutions were made in the backfield in the first game. Laird went in for DeArmon, Covington for Hendrix, and Anderson for Black and Hunt were also used. Sappenfield was in three plays at the last part of the game when Coach Younger rushed him into the game to relieve Hendrix at quarterback.

Davidson's line held the charging of the heavyweights from Elton in good style. Summers and Anderson, tackles, Cox and Vance, guards, Malory, center, and Captain Faison and Davis, ends, lined up for play in the first game. Holcomb was later substituted for Anderson.

The game with P. C. Friday is important to the locals. Scores of former games give the South Carolina team the edge. The 1919 saw the eleven scrapping to a scoreless tie. 1920 was a win for P. C. by a score of 7 to 0. Davidson won the annual clash in 1921 by the same score. The latest defeat to Davidson came last fall when the Johnson machine won by an 8 to 7 count at Clinton.

Four Elevens Stand Out In Western Conference

Iowa, Chicago, Minnesota and Wisconsin appear to be strongest at This Stage of Work.

BY JAMES MCCLAIN.

(United News Staff Correspondent.) Chicago, September 25.—Almost overnight football has monopolized sporting interest throughout the middle west, and, save for the few short days of the world series, will reign supreme until the last firecracker post-mortem is held the night after the turkey day battles.

Squads have taken the field at all Big Ten and Missouri Valley schools and the real grind started the middle of last week. Two weeks of whipping the men into shape, perfecting each of the machine and out-fora-fora embryo stars, and then the preliminary clashes on September 29. Both conferences will open the season formally a week later, after the trial games have brought out the weak spots that must be filled.

Iowa, Chicago, Minnesota and Wisconsin loomed on paper as the class of the Big Ten. Coach Yost can be depended upon to bring out a team that for its early season does radiating lights for every inch, but right now Michigan prospects are not as bright as usual, for ten letter men, seven of them mainstays of the 1922 eleven, were graduated last spring. Ohio State, too, remains an unknown factor, for in the early season does radiating lights from conference campuses not a whisper has been heard of Ohio State prospects.

The team that fought the losing fight against Bill Roper's Tigers from Princeton is back on Coach Stag's field here almost to a man. Stag has only two berths to fill, those vacated by Strohmeier, quarterback, and Fletcher, left tackle. The job of finding a field general is a perplexing problem, and Jim Fyot, the speedy select Captain Jim Fyot, the speedy for this game. Head Coach "Bud" Saunders, whose charges will make the eleven, has the advantage of tutelage against the Auburn Plainsmen, is working hard to give the visitors a battle for their money.

Furman Optimistic. Furman's Purple Panthers, according to reports from the mountain city, is in good condition to meet the Virginians on their home field. Supporters of the Baptists are not claiming a victory in advance of the playing of the contest, but they are looking forward to the event with confidence that Billy Laval's pupils will give their opponents a hard battle.

Coach Sol Metzger's Gamecocks will try their spurs for the first time against the eleven of the Enslines at Columbia, and it is understood that Metzger has given the word that the Carolinians are to roll as big a score as possible.

Thirty-three men have been placed on the varsity squad under the direction of Coach Chadwick. Billy Hayes is whipping the scrubs into shape and breaking up forward passes, signal drill, etc., there have been a couple of scrimmages that can be designated as discouraging for these frays were between two of the teams of the varsity squad and showed little organized drive, and experienced ability.

That far there has been but one injury sustained of any prominence. Joe Hooker Huff has a bruised shoulder that has kept the "Wild Bull" of the campus out of the game for the major part of this week. The remainder of the squad is in fine shape, hard as rocks and healthy.

Incidentally, while the Athletics were recovering from the beating Jones gave them, Howard Ehmke was plicated his feat against the poor Mackmen less than a week later. Which has caused the Humana Society to think of taking an interest in the Macks.

Philadelphia, September 25.—Although it is his fate to be cast with one of the worst ball clubs in the game, Cy Williams, the home-run hitter, after years of imprisonment, will enjoy at least one bright afternoon of glory Thursday.

This is to be "Cy Williams day" in Philadelphia, and it is so long since the Phils have had a player worth celebrating that the occasion will be a bright one.

Chapel Hill, N. C., September 25.—(Special.)—The North Carolina football squad this week gets down to the serious business of preparing for its first game, that with Wake Forest next Saturday. The University eleven had no difficulty in defeating the Baptists last year, but the ominous silence in the Wake Forest camp thus far this season is giving football folk here considerable concern.

Reports apparently authentic have it that the Baptist silence to date is part of their pre-battle strategy, that they have an exceptionally good team and are expecting to give Carolina the surprise of the season.

Four former William and Mary players of ability past excellence are said to be in the Wake Forest lineup, and there is the flashing Stringfield and the steady and dependable Heckman.

It appears to observers now that for the first game Lineberger or Shepard will be on one end with Captain "Casey" Morris on the other. Matthews and Hawfield look like acceptable candidates for tackle. For guards Fordham and Poindester will probably be chosen. Melver should show up good at center. In the backfield Randolph, Merritt, Sparrow and McDunn look best.

Shirley Seeks Place. There is a wealth of first-rate material among last year's freshmen and men ineligible then. There is "Mule" Shirley, who graduated last year, and is back for law. He is captain of this year's baseball team. He is out for football for the first time and looks like an acceptable backfield man. Woodson is another man out for the first time for a backfield position.

Hamer, a sophomore, a former Citadel man, looks good for a berth at guard. Robinson, former Weaver college star, is fairly certain of center on the second level.

Street of last year's fresh, a 100-pound guard, is improving every day. Currie, also a sophomore and 100-pounder, will be another strong contender for guard.

Billy Devin, captain of last year's freshmen, is attracting considerable attention with his punting. He and Gled, Griffin and Underwood of last year's freshmen are all in fine fettle, and promise to give varsity contenders stiff competition.

Nebraska, as customary when not out of the conference on a net peeve, is strongest in the Missouri Valley. Missouri, Kansas and Oklahoma promise to bring forth teams that will be able to give Nebraska a hard battle. Drake, Grinnell, Kansas Aggies and Washington squads of from 50 to 100 men are also at work.

form that feat. On May 5, 1904, the grand old man from Tuscarawas county, O., turned every man jack of the Athletic crew back. Four years later, when the Iowa duplicate of Young's feat against the White Sox. During the 1922 campaign young Charley Robertson, fresh from the sticks, joined Cy and Adie.

A number of pitchers have turned in no-hit games but errors, passes and infield grounders turned into forecourts have put men on bases.

But the number is not great enough to make the feat at all commonplace. Happy is any player who turns in one such a game in his career and those who come and go without achieving hitless fame are legion.

All this seems not to worry Sam. He seems as glum as ever. Still has nothing to do but pitch. And, oh, how he rears it.

Tech Coach Plans To Use Ten Plays in Grid Bout With Oglethorpe Saturday

"Rube" Bartenfelt, Veteran a Petrel Grid Warrior, Reports to Coach Robertson and Goes to Tackle.

BY JOHN STATION.

The customary scrimmage was completed with much zip and snap on the part of the Tech varsity yesterday, due largely to the reappearance of Claire Frye in fighting tows. Claire, varsity center, had been out of the rough work for about ten days, due to a sore leg. Yesterday he was back at his position of snapper-back on offense, and first backer-up on defense. He injected his usual fighting spirit into the play, and bouted things up considerably. Especially on defense did his appearance make itself felt through his fierce tackling at the holes. Indications now point toward Claire starting the game Saturday.

Coach Alexander is somewhat perplexed with the guard situation as it now stands. Two of the men he is counting on strongly are at this time unable to take part in any of the more strenuous activities. They are Felton McConnell, who is out with a broken rib, and Meyers, who is incapacitated to an operation on his toe. If these two men should be unable to return to the game by Saturday, then Coach Alexander will be hard put to find some one to play alongside Captain McIntyre against Oglethorpe.

Hull is perhaps the next in line after McConnell and Meyers, but he is nursing a sore thigh, which is liable to "go on the bum" any afternoon. Yesterday, just to prepare for a real round of tough luck, Coach Alex ran Dick Fair at a guard. Dick, it will be remembered, held down one of the tackles on Dad Amis' freshman team last year. However, while at G. M. A. Dick played guard for a half-season. Though he did not engage in scrimmages yesterday, Dick ran signals at that position all afternoon, and became thoroughly accustomed to the duties of guard as it is played at Tech.

No New Plays Given. Coach Alex announced that he would not give his team any new plays until after the Oglethorpe game. Thus far Tech cannot present a very varied attack, but the ten now in hand are the essence of good football. Tech has enough plays from close formation to keep Oglethorpe guessing, and sufficient variety from punt formation to cover up the ace.

Coach Alex has always leaned toward the belief that a few plays played well and executed with drive, are far more valuable than many plays which contain no punch. Any play almost will go if the line charges hard enough, and the ten now in hand are all its potential power. And conversely, the most theoretically perfect play in the catalogue will flounder if the two essential elements are left out.

The Oglethorpe game is but four days off. It will open the season for left tackle, the majority of the work handed out by Abell has been of the nature to condition the team, such as physical drills, returning punts, breaking up forward passes, signal drill, etc., there have been a couple of scrimmages that can be designated as discouraging for these frays were between two of the teams of the varsity squad and showed little organized drive, and experienced ability.

A collection is being taken to buy a present for Williams.

The story is largely large receipts of such an occasion will, of course, go to the club owners.

there is a real knowledge of football. This is just some advance dope which should cause many to sit up and look around a bit.

BARTENFELT REPORTS TO OGLETHORPE MENTOR. "Rube" Bartenfelt, three-year letter man on the Petrel machine and supposedly lost to the '23 combination, reported in uniform to Coach Robertson yesterday at Hernando Field and signified his desire of filling his old position at one of the tackles. The return of Bartenfelt to the team is a hard schedule. In his three years at the university "Rube" has accounted for some nice playing in his experience together with his ability to make sensational tackles. He will materially help in the Oglethorpe lineup.

Yesterday's practice at Oglethorpe was filled with signal practice, running down punts and closed with a short scrimmage in which the varsity gave their best exhibition of the present training session. In the past scrimmages held in the Petrel stronghold the line has failed almost entirely in opening any sort of holes for the backs, but yesterday the play was a little better in this respect, the first team gaining with consistency.

The first string combination scored twice in the short period of scrimmage and showed noticeable improvement in practically every department. The Petrels are far from being in the best of trim for their battle Saturday with the Tech Jackets, however, and a lot of coaching and signal drills are necessary before the Petrels can deliver their best brand before the home folks.

Clay Parrish, veteran center, was out in uniform after several days lay-off on account of a bad leg and his presence will help the Petrels. Though he is in pretty bad condition on account of recent injuries to his leg, there is a possibility of his being in the lineup sometime during the affair Saturday afternoon.

The reserve strength of the Petrel machine is the best in the history of the institution. With three backfields of practically the same strength, and with two extra pairs of ends and a best of trim for their battle Saturday with the Tech Jackets, however, and a lot of coaching and signal drills are necessary before the Petrels can deliver their best brand before the home folks.

The other day "Sad Sam" Jones, modest little violet from Woodfield, O., read how the Athletics, through fat years and lean, had escaped being hitless with three other men who, then with the White Sox, turned the trick that year.

"It's about time somebody else did it to 'em again," mused Sam. So he got a good sleep that night and the next day turned the trick—without smiling once.

When his fellow players rushed up to congratulate him after he had turned back twenty-nine men and watched but two reach first base on an error and one on a pass—he sort of sighed and said: "I had a real good day."

It was the first no-hit game ever registered by a Yankee hurler. Other pitchers who had worn or later donned Yankee blue suits bore the burden of games but hung them up for other clubs.

Joe Bush held the Indians hitless as a Mackman. George Morigio, former Yank southpaw, won such a game for Washington. Jim Vaughn, at one time a Yankee hurler, won the ninth inning against Fred Toney in one of the greatest pitching duels in the game's history.

Meanwhile, the Yanks have been turned back hitless. George Foster, star of the Red Sox in 1910, turned the trick against the Gothamites that year.

But for that pass and error, which marred Jones' game he would have taken rank with three other men who have turned in no-hit, no-man-reach games since the modern style of baseball was adopted.

FOOTBALL IS FIGHTING FOR NEW ORLEANS

Clarence Kraft's Clouting Stribling Has Edge McGigue in Some Respects

Martina Losing Moundsman

Larry Gilbert Will Shoot "Dixie" Walker Against Champions of the Texas League in Today's Struggle.

Panther Park, Fort Worth, September 25.—Clarence Kraft, home run king of the Texas league and idol of Fort Worth fandom, "did his stuff" today in the opening game of the Dixie series, and the Cubs defeated the New Orleans Pelicans, 3 to 1.

Kraft's blow, a solid smash over the left field fence, was the only home run of the game. The Cubs, in the first inning, broke up a great pitchers' battle between Lill Storer, Fort Worth ace, and Joe Martina, Pelicans ace.

Both pitchers were in wonderful form, although Martina was somewhat wild, allowing six bases on balls. The Cubs were able to gather only five hits off his fast ones, however, and had it not been for Kraft's timely hit, the initial clash of the Southern classic would have gone into extra innings.

Storer was invincible and the only run that the Pelicans were able to register was unearned, an error by Kraft paying the way.

The Cubs counted first Dowie starting the third inning by taking a fast one in the ribs. Martina hit to Kraft, who juggled the ball and then threw wild to first. Dowie taking it and Martina scored. Bogart's infield hit filled the bases. Gilbert forced Dowie at the plate. Henry sent a long fly to center, and Martina scored.

In the fourth, Kraft hit his homer after Edgington had walked, making two Fort Worth scores and giving them the lead, 2 to 1.

Fort Worth added one more for good measure in the eighth inning on Calvo's single. Sears' sacrifice and Kraft's single.

Pelicans Were Tame.
The Southern association champions never carried a dangerous threat and Storer held them at his mercy, sending five of them back to the bench via the strike-out route.

Gilbert's Southerners accorded Martina great support, flashing two fast double plays, but lacked the punch to figure in the hitting end.

Willie Ogg Gets Rid of His Opponent in Quick Order—Favorites Have Easy Time Winning.

Pelham Manor, N. Y., September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—Standing out from a number of brilliant performances in the second round of the Professional Golfers' association country club course today, was the feat of Joe Kirkwood, the Australian, in overcoming a six-hole lead taken by his opponent, Colarbone, N. Y., on the first nine. On the last twenty-seven holes Kirkwood shot the greatest golf of his career, squaring the match on the 28th, with a birdie two, and taking the lead with an eagle three on the 30th, a crooked hole, 463 yards in length.

All the other players won handsily. Gene Sarazen, shooting under the par the entire round, defeated D. K. White, Jr., and took the lead. Long Jim Barnes, three strokes under par, won from John Cowan, 10 and 8. Robert Cruikshank, defeated George Underhill, 10 and 8. Fred McLeod, the Columbia country club pro, of Washington, had a stiff engagement with James McPherson of Riverside, Ill., but won 3 and 2. John Farrell, after playing even with William Hunter, of Lake Forest, Ill., for thirty holes, won 4 and 2. Jack Stall, of Hartford, Conn., rode out the third quarter, while at the bottom of the draw Kirkwood and Farrell and George McLean and Willie Ogg are paired.

Tomorrow's round will bring some of the stars together. It is the first of the stars together. It is the first of the stars together.

University High and Gilmerites Clash in Fine Scrimmage—Bluebirds Looking for Games.

Boys' High and University school football candidates had a merry time Monday out at Piedmont in a short scrimmage between the two teams. It is a misfortune that these two leading eleven do not meet on the gridiron this fall, but they evidently intend ranking the best of the bad bargain by hoping condition each other in practice scrimmages.

The contest was a short affair, lasting but a few minutes, but in that time some unusual football was played for an early date. Of course many weak points were brought out in the play of both squads, but such deficiencies needed to be remedied. The weak spots and put the general play of the teams on a higher plane.

It was University's first scrimmage of the year and they showed up remarkably well. The Bluebirds never have over twenty men out, so even when a scrimmage is desired it is very inconvenient for the squad to put it on still still maintain their varsity. Boys' High, on the other hand, has the advantage of two weeks' training and a week's practice. The Bluebirds have a few advantages in weight, but the Purple and White warriors held the larger men at bay.

Using a series of aerial attack and several kick formations, the Gilmerites made several nice gains. It was the forward passing game that won the day for the Purple and White warriors. The Purple and White warriors held the larger men at bay.

BELGIUM APPEARS BALLOON WINNER

Brussels, September 25.—(By the Associated Press.)—Belgium appears to have won the international balloon race for the Gordon Bennett cup again this year, either with Demuyter, the landing of whose balloon, Belgium, at 1 o'clock Monday about the center of Sweden, gives him a distance of about 600 miles, or with Veenstra, piloting the Prince Leopold, whose fate at the moment is unknown. Demuyter's distance last year when he won the trophy was 875 miles, and his time then was 25 hours, as compared with 21 hours this year.

The tragic race which started Sunday from the broad plain of Solbosch, outside of Brussels, caused the death of five pilots or aides, the grave injury of one and less serious injuries to four others, the destruction of several of the balloons and the fall of two of them into the sea—all of which may lead to the race rules being changed for future contests.

Dubois, who had a miraculous escape when the French balloon Savioz fell, was the only one to land safely, which he did in the snow in June or July. Others are strongly of the opinion that a more favorable season of the year for the contest would mean less danger to the lives of the contestants.

RAIL AND POWER CONTEST DECIDED

Tifton, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—A contest involving the rights of holder of right-of-way on the earth to control the same in the air above, into which the matter of possession under easement or possession under fee absolute entered, was passed on by Judge R. E. of the Tifton judicial circuit in chambers in Tifton. It was a question that promises to set a precedent in this section in the matter of crossing railroad right-of-ways with the transmission lines of hydro-electric power companies.

The plaintiffs were the South Georgia Public Service company, a branch of the Georgia-Alabama Power company, against the Atlantic Coast Line Railroad company. There was an array of legal talent on both sides and Manager L. L. Ferree, of the South Georgia Public Service company, of Albany and Superintendent R. A. McCranie, of the Atlantic Coast Line, with headquarters in Savannah, attended.

Court Makes Ruling.

The court was inclined to the view that under its deed and possession the railroad was not the owner of the right-of-way, but that it was the owner of an exclusive easement. Therefore, it was entitled to forbid the erection of any tower or post on the right-of-way, or any interference with the free use thereof, but that the South Georgia Public Service company had the right to erect such towers and poles and strung its transmission lines across the right-of-way of the railroad, provided such towers or poles were not placed upon the right-of-way, and provided, further, that its transmission line was not strung so as to interfere with the free and safe operation of said railroad.

The South Georgia Public Service company is building a transmission line from Albany to Valdosta, via Tifton. At a point eleven miles east of Albany, ten miles west of Sylvester, its line crosses the right-of-way of the Atlantic Coast Line railroad. It is stated that one of its forty-foot towers was erected on the right-of-way of the railroad and the wires of its transmission line were strung across the same. Plaintiff alleges that employees of the railroad beat and cut the wires, destroyed the tower and removed the debris from its right-of-way. Therefore, the South Georgia Public Service company brought petition for injunction, restraining defendant railroad from interfering with the construction of its lines, and for damages in question. At any other point, expressing its intent to cross the right-of-way of the railroad at Sylvester and also at Tifton. In addition to the sum of $5,000 damages was asked.

Claimed Good Faith.

Plaintiff claimed good faith in the construction of its transmission line across the right-of-way at the point in question, under an agreement, alleged to have been reached in Albany between attorneys representing both sides. It was necessary to show good faith because of the damages asked. Attorneys for the Atlantic Coast Line contended that the agreement in question concerned another line, that to Boston, into which an old agreement entered as a factor, and that the only agreement under which crossing of its right-of-way could be allowed would be the standard form of contract under which power companies were permitted to cross railroad right-of-ways which form must be signed, or agreement to sign positive.

Point of Contention.

The real point of contention, however, was the form of the title under which the railroad company held possession of right-of-way. If its title was a feehold, or fee absolute, then the railroad had the right to forbid plaintiff from crossing its lines, either in the air above or under the earth beneath. If, however, it held title under easement for the use of the right-of-way for railroad purposes, then it had no right to forbid plaintiff from crossing its right-of-way at any point where such crossing was necessary, provided its towers and transmission line were erected in such way as not to interfere with the safe and secure operation of the railroad. The plaintiff contended that the defendant held title under easement only. The defendant claimed title under feehold, or fee absolute, and that on this essential point there was a sharp difference between attorneys.

Memphis, Tenn., September 25.—Federal court proceedings incidental to receivership proceedings instituted by Clarence Saunders, former Piggly Wiggly executive, against the Piggly Wiggly corporation and demands made by the corporation for an accounting by Saunders, took a new turn today with the filing by C. L. Marsiliotti, federal master in receivership, of a petition for summary judgment in the case.

The report, presented to Judge J. W. Ross late today, will be taken up for argument tomorrow.

Mr. Marsiliotti also recommended that the Piggly Wiggly Stores, Inc., be made a party to the pending proceedings.

Attention is called in the report to various suits filed in federal and state courts against either the corporation, the stores company or Saunders since hearing of the petition seeking the receivership and accounting began and the possibility of complicating matters through a multiplicity of suits.

The report points out that the suits filed in federal court are based largely upon the assertion that certain liabilities said to have been incurred by Saunders were in fact, liabilities of the corporation.

Saunders testified in the receivership proceedings that in various stock selling and financial transactions he acted as an agent for the corporation.

Probe of Convict Camps Is Opened By Alabama Jury

Birmingham, Ala., September 25.—Conditions at convict camps in Jefferson county generally, and at Banner mines in particular, were inquired into today by the county grand jury, according to announcement by the solicitor's office, which gave the names of the state convict board, and Dr. F. E. Blair, physician-inspector for the board, as chief witnesses.

The inquiry, brought by an alleged strike at Banner mines September 10, is expected to be concluded by a visit of the grand jury to the mines either tomorrow or Thursday, according to the solicitor. This proposed visit to the mines is expected to bring a climax in the clash of authority between the executive and judicial branches of the government. Mr. Nolan was quoted today as saying the supreme court order preventing convicts from appearing before the grand jury, would operate as a stay to keep the body from visiting the convicts at the mines.

Dr. Blair will take the grand jury into the camp under authority vested by the law requiring inspection of all camps within jurisdiction of the state.

Numerous witnesses are yet to be heard, it was stated.

The solicitor's office offered no explanation of the delay in the grand jury's visit to the mines.

Dr. Blair, physician at Flat Top mines, had been summoned to appear before the grand jury, as a witness, and was employed at Flat Top, a coal mine property.

Experts to Meet.

Savannah, Ga., September 25.—(Special.)—More than fifty of the accounting experts of the steamship lines interested in the business of the Georgia ports, will hold a business conference here October 10 to 12. blue. Tall blue glass candlesticks holding unshaded blue tapers cast a soft glow over the enchanting scene. Mrs. Hinman received her guests wearing a smart gown of black satin trimmed with narrow butter colored lace. Miss Johnson wore a Parisian model of black satin, and her hat was a French model in black panne velvet.

Covers were laid for the attractive groups of young women who will act as bridesmaids to Miss Johnson and included Misses Louise Inman, Jennie Robinson, Emmie Nixon, Sarah Orme, Margaret Nelson, Margaret Morgan and Mrs. Charles Rawson.

Naegele, the eminent portrait painter, who said of it, "I consider this an excellent piece of artistic work in which the character of the subject is admirably expressed, not only in the physiognomy but chronologically for the artist has excellently conveyed home atmosphere of the time in which the subject lived." Fine Arts Club Will Present Mono-Dramas on October 2

An interesting event announced for the early fall will be the program of the Fine Arts club to be presented in the ballroom of the Piedmont Driving club, Tuesday morning at 11 o'clock, on October 2.

This will open the season's program of this cultural organization. Mrs. Ewell Gay, the president, has planned this and the meeting to follow, along brilliant and fitting lines, each to be noted for distinction and beauty.

Mono-Dramas to Be Given.
The Mono-Dramas of Sherrard Wilcox Pollard, assisted by Fannie Hoghead Clothier, will be the artistic offering of the morning, and is called "Poetry in Porcelain." The form in which these Mono-Dramas are developed is somewhat that of a cycle in which the souls of four women of different nationalities are, through fear, false pride, greed and ambition doomed to spend their days as a part of the decorations of the decoration of porcelains.

Four plates of Willow ware, Dresden, Wedgwood and Moscow, exquisitely designed by Mrs. Clothier, will be superimposed upon a background of dark velvet, lending a touch of exquisite beauty.

The scene on each plate will illustrate the story of these dramatic miniatures to be read by Mrs. Pollard wearing costumes of ravishing loveliness suggestive of the story painted on each plate.

The first of these fantasies will describe a little Chinese girl whose timidity held her back from going to the arms of her American lover; then of the French marquise whose false pride was her undoing; of the English girl who gave up love to marry an aged nobleman, only to lose him through death, and of the Russian dancer who laughed at love when she was summoned to dance before the czar and his court.

It is impossible to conceive of the imaginative loveliness of these mono-dramas, their dainty charm, dramatic qualities and pictorial beauty. It is an original, clever, and artistic contribution.

After the program, a five-course seated luncheon will be served to those who desire to remain. The membership list of the Fine Arts club remains the same as last year with the exception of eighteen vacancies, which have already been filled from the names on the waiting list.

The other officers associated with Mrs. Gay include Miss Nan Stephens, Mrs. Joel Hurt, Jr., and Mrs. Walter Colquitt.

Fulton U. D. C's. Will Entertain C. S. Veterans

HOUSEHOLD SUGGESTIONS

Hot Buns, Hot Plates.
Always serve hot biscuits or hot pastries on warmed plates. Placing hot pastries on cold dishes will make the lightest and best soggy.

Quickens the Process.
If you wash gelatine to set quickly, add only half of the liquid as cold as possible. This will greatly quicken the solidifying process.

Careful of Jack Frost.
Don't leave the plants out on the porch overnight when the days begin to get a bit cold. Bring them in before Jack Frost has a chance to nip them and you will have porch decorations for another year.

Save Mending.
If the panels on your dress are tacked to the bottom of your skirt, you are almost certain to catch them and tear them. Use clips to hold them under the hem and then if they fastened.

Cuts the Grease.
A piece of flannel dipped in kerosene will remove the grease from the sink. Then wash with warm water and soap, and finally, let the cold water run for a few minutes so the drain pipes will be cleaned as well as the sink.

Atlanta Red Cross Calls For Help For Needy Ex-Soldiers

A great many calls are coming in for help for ex-soldiers, who are still being assisted by the Atlanta Chapter Red Cross, who otherwise would be likely to suffer as the cold weather is coming on. Many of these men are recovering their health, but are not yet able to support themselves, and the call right now is very urgent for underwear, shoes, trousers, and other clothing, to be used to tide them over until they can get employment.

The wife of one ex-soldier is in great need of clothing at 42, present, especially a dress, size 42, shoes, size 5, and any other garments that would fit this size. This is an urgent case, and Mrs. W. E. Mansfield, chairman of the production committee, feels sure the Atlanta people will respond to it promptly, as they always do. Please send all donations to the Atlanta Chapter Red Cross, second floor, Red Cross building, corner of West Baker and Ivy streets.

E. H. Thompson Is Given Surprise.

Edward H. Thompson was given a surprise party by a group of intimate friends at his home on Broadway road, Monday evening, in honor of his birthday. An amusing contest, "The Story of His Life in Song," was planned by the guests and Thompson was later showered with gifts to be used at his summer home, Biarritz cottage, Clayton, Ga. Mrs. Thompson was assisted by her young daughter, Elizabeth, in entertaining.

There is a noticeable tendency among the women's organizations to become more clearly informed in these problems, hitherto a controversial subject in women's clubs. This tendency inspires a desire that social pathology be intelligently discussed in its broader aspects.

"This publication should be a potent instrument in the coordination of group efforts in sustaining an underlying unity of purpose. It is intended to bind our diverse interests and activities in the field of social work. Consequently unified programs should seek to utilize the information made available to strike at the root of these evils and solve these problems. Experience in adapting such programs to meet local needs will be most desirable.

"The plan in this publication purposes to strongly emphasize educational values, particularly in sex study. It will aim also to awaken a sense of social responsibility in young adults and to inspire in them zeal for active participation. Workers in this field may therefore be assisted in the planning of their own work with a new sense of its importance."

Save Mending.
If the panels on your dress are tacked to the bottom of your skirt, you are almost certain to catch them and tear them. Use clips to hold them under the hem and then if they fastened.

Cuts the Grease.
A piece of flannel dipped in kerosene will remove the grease from the sink. Then wash with warm water and soap, and finally, let the cold water run for a few minutes so the drain pipes will be cleaned as well as the sink.

Simple Application That Dissolves Blackheads
No more squeezing and pinching to get rid of those unsightly blemishes, blackheads. There is one simple, safe and sure way to get them out and that is to dissolve them. Get about two ounces of calomel powder from your druggist—sprinkle a little on a hot, wet cloth—rub briskly over the blackheads for a few seconds—wash the parts and every blackhead will be gone.

Pinching and squeezing out blackheads make large pores and you cannot get all of the blackheads out this way—while this simple application of calomel powder and water dissolves every particle of them and leaves the skin pores in their natural condition. (adv.)

Lady Says She Was in a Desperate Condition, But "Now In Splendid Health" After Taking Cardui.

Dale, Ind.—"About three years ago this place, 'I had the flu,' which left me in a desperate condition. I had a bad cough. I went down in weight to little of weight who have taken it. I took different medicines—did everything, but nothing seemed to do me any good. I hurt so badly in the chest at times, I would have to go to the door to get my breath.

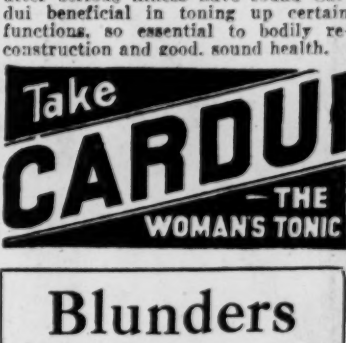

"I would have the headache and I was so weak I felt like I would just have to sink down and stay there.

"My nerves were shattered. I looked for something awful to happen—I would tremble and shake at a noise.

"My mother said, 'Do try Cardui,' and my husband insisted that I begin its use. I used two bottles of Cardui... and noted a big improvement in my condition. I kept up the Cardui and weigh 150 pounds. I am now in splendid health—sure am a firm believer in Cardui for I'm satisfied it did the work.

After-effects of debilitating illness often are as alarming as the illness itself. For women, Cardui, as a tonic, is especially indicated. Thousands of women who have taken it after serious illness have found Cardui beneficial in toning up certain functions, so essential to bodily reconstruction and good, sound health.

BEAUTY CHATS

By Edna K. Forbes

WHEN YOU ARE TIRED OUT.

I have often suggested hasty beauty treatments to make a tired face seem fresh again. Today I'd like to suggest ways to rest when you are so tired out you can't rest in familiar surroundings with many women, I'm afraid, which will make you look fresh at the end because you are fresh, and not because of artificial stimulation.

Long experience has taught me that some forms of exhaustion are so great one can't relax, of oneself. Some outside, soothing force must come and help. Some physicians will even advise mild bromide, "enough," one of them put it, "to push you over the hills, when you just haven't the nerve force to make it yourself." But ordinarily bromides aren't needed and are a bad habit and should be taken on doctors' advice only.

If it's nervous exhaustion, office work, study, any kind of mental strain, with no muscular work, take a lot of vigorous exercises; a hot bath, a hot drink, roll up with a hot water bottle at your feet and try to sleep. Oh yes, rub your head hard, with the hair down. All this stirs the sluggish blood, relaxes the tensed nerves, uses the muscles, breaks the great nervous strain. Do deep breathing exercises, quick arm exercises, bend swiftly again and again to touch the floor with your hands; stand on a hassock on one foot and vigorously swing the other leg a couple of dozen times. You'll be amazed at the change in the way you feel.

If it's physical exhaustion, it's easier to sleep. But even then, if the strain has been on only one set of muscles, a few brisk exercises will rest and relax the body. Stopping and bending exercises rest a tired back for instance. Then again: a quick massage of the head (especially if the head aches) a bath, hot water bottle and a nap. A Turkish bath, followed by 12 hours in bed, is excellent when you are tired.

Such a treatment only amounts to an application of the oils from the finger tips, and when the pores have taken up what it needed, the surplus should be removed and the pores closed with very cold water or ice. CHAPTER LXXXII.

"Why not marry me, Gloria?" insisted Frank Carver. "Think of what I can give you, dear—position, wealth—everything a girl wants."

"Everything but love," thought Gloria, but said nothing.

"You know that I care for you," he went on. "I want to protect you, to look after you."

"Oh, please," begged the girl, drawing back. "Please let me think about it. I don't insist on my telling you right here—it's so noisy and crowded and—"

He smiled, and beckoned to the waiter to bring the check. "I'd forgotten that this was no place for sentiment, my dear," he told her. "Out in the moonlight is a better place, isn't it? Let's take a run up the Hudson. It's too warm to stay indoors, this Indian summer weather."

Gloria did not want to drive with him, yet she did not want to let him spend the rest of the evening with reporters could reach him, either. She knew that he would refuse to answer the telephone late at night, claiming that he needed the night from twelve on for rest. It was one of his characteristics on which he had capitalized, and many a magazine that specialized in stories of great men and how they had become great, had told and retold the story of Frank Carver, who appreciated to the full the value of the golden hours of the night.

"Wonder why they never tell about the times when he goes on parties and stays up till six in the morning," Valerie had commented once, laughingly, and Gloria thought of that now. Carver would have some good reason for those lapses from his schedule, she knew—to himself he was always consistent, always the great man.

She decided that if she could prevent his being reached by the newspapers that night, it would be easy enough to slip out in the morning before he could telephone her; thus she would avoid the storm of his wrath and of explanations. She could leave the hotel early, and as her train left during the morning there would be a few hours to kill. He would not know where to reach her. She knew.

Members of the congregation of Big Bethel church will formulate plans to begin the sale of "The Life of President Harding," at a meeting tonight at the church. once given to her cousin, and that she owed some hundreds of dollars at the shops and could not get the money to pay her bills.

Gloria's first horrified thought was of Larry—had Morton Phelps gone to him with this same story? Her next one was of Carver. How could she convince him that the story was not true?

"I never saw the money, not a penny of it," she assured him. "Truly I didn't. And I'll give you a check at once for the amount, whatever it is." He looked at her incredulously, and she realized that he did not believe her. But at last, after she had urged with tears in her eyes, he handed her his check book, and she crossed out the name of his bank, wrote in the name of hers, and filled it out for eight hundred dollars, the amount he had given Morton Phelps.

"Were you supposed to get this money back?" she asked him, as she gave him the check.

"Well, I—well, Phelps seemed to know that I wanted you to marry me, an intimated that—"

"You were buying me for eight hundred dollars; was that it?" she demanded angrily. "Did you think for an instant that I'd be a party to such a deal as that? Oh, you—I never want to see you again. I hate you. I don't care what the papers say!" And although it took half an hour for them to get back to her hotel, he could not persuade her to change her decision.

"But—I don't see why you were cad enough to go and tell him such lies about me!"

"Lies! Now listen, Joy—you had me hounding for a while there. I didn't know exactly where to place you. Of course, living with Jerry and Sal gave me a fairly good idea."

"What did you say, when you told Grant what kind of girl I was living with?"

"I was about to say," he went on, "that you pulled the innocent girl fairly well, but a little too frequent. I can stand just about as much, Joy—after which, off come the brakes and away we skid."

"The last time she had seen eyes with that look in them—it had been from—Jac Barnett, standing up steadily against the wall."

A veering turn into a crossroad brought a protest. "What are we leaving the Shore Road for? Is this the way back?"

"This isn't the way back. I'm not going to take you back until I'm good and ready—and the devil only knows when that'll be!"

No more time to think, now—she knew what she must do. Her hands crept out to the knob of the door. Mechanically she looked in and saw a car in the distance—a car that was dimly conscious of her following them for some time. She could open the door in one second, jump out in another—and before Packy could get back to her, the other car would be upon them.

She turned the knob; Packy saw her at the same minute. With a growl he lurched towards her and seized her by one arm. She struggled vigorously, and he took her hand from the steering wheel and pulled her back into the seat again.

It all happened in one of those seconds of eternity. While they struggled, the car, still going at white-hot speed without a hand at the wheel, careened from the road and was stopped by a tree.

A jarring crash which made one aware of very little bone and ligament shivering one's body; the eerie sensation of flying through space; then—nothingness.

Jerry was sitting at the foot of the bed—a pale Jerry, with eyes large and black as inkwells, her freckles standing out in bold relief.

She jumped up. "Joy! Hello, old girl!"

"What happened, Jerry?"

"Jerry pulled out her cigarette case. "Mind if I have a puff of this? The doc would kill me for doing this here, but I'm so fuzzy since this happened—Packy, allow me to snort, got off nobly with a bump of the eye. The nasty little garter snake! You see, Joy, Jim Dalton and I were pursuing you in a taxi at ten dollars per sneeze, all the way."

"Jim Dalton?"

"Right. Take it from one who has flown about on the four winds, Joy—he's all right. He played a hunch to come up that night, and he might have saved your life for all you know."

Joy fell back on the pillows. "Oh, all right—but go on."

"Dear little Packy flew in on one of the stiffest breaths I've come near since the dry spell. Wanted to know where you were, why you weren't here, etcetera, and I told him to go to and stay put. Well, you would go riding, and I was all for letting you go, but Dalton got a taxi and told me to put on my old gray bonnet and trot along with him. I trotted!"

She took a long breath.

Jerry whistled. "Joy, when I saw Packy hit the tree, I was mad as hell; and we certainly paid Packy off. We picked you up—rather Jim Dalton—and put you in the taxi—leaving Packy to his own devices. Not a peep has been heard from him; he must have come to and slapped the car into shape."

"Now you've gotten to me," said Joy.

"You've had a little concussion of the brain. The doctor says you'll be all right in a couple of weeks. Mr. Grant Grey has called up once or twice. I told him you were ill, but I guess he thinks it's only a stall."

"Oh—Grant?"

"She dismissed the subject. "My father, Jerry—you haven't let him know about me, have you?"

"No, I didn't. I sort of thought you wouldn't want him to know."

The two weeks set by the doctor had not quite passed when, one afternoon, Joy felt of lying in bed. She felt perfectly well; there was no reason why she shouldn't get up and walk as far as the living-room. She did not admit to herself that the cellarette was her real objective; but it had been a long time since she had taken a "prescription."

She slipped into her crepe kimono and swung in the door of the living-room before she saw Jerry, talking to Jim Dalton.

"I'm glad to see you're able to be around, Miss Nola," Jim said calmly. "You won't have to go back; I was just leaving."

Jerry went to the door with him, and came back into the room, smoking in a desultory manner. "I didn't think I'd tell you, Joy, because I know you don't like him—but that boy has been here every day since you've been sick, to find out how you were at first-hand—while your Grant has stalled at phone distance. Grant listens to me like a flat tire!"

Joy giggled nervously.

"It isn't easy for Jim to come, either," Jerry added. He takes the trip way out here after he gets through working every day."

"It's none of Jim Dalton's business," said Joy. "He doesn't have to come; I wish he wouldn't. Jerry," she cried suddenly. "Did you know that Grant had left me?"

"Of course, Joy, I don't know the facts of the case—but he'll come back. I'd stake ten to one on it."

"I'm waiting," said Joy.

And she waited through a week that passed on leaden wheels. And one evening about ten-thirty when she heard a babble of voices in the living-room, she made up her mind to dress and annex herself to the crowd.

The music of popping corks and carefree laughter assailed her ears as she came into the room. There were three men, not counting one that Sarah had taken to a comfortable, cozy corner and to whom she was archly whispering. Jerry was standing by the piano. Her lips parted in an avid, gamin grin, and hardly opening her teeth, she jutted forth the words of a song.

Jerry, "lightly edged," was fascinating as ever, but not a pleasant sight.

Watching the sight before her Joy felt a sensation that she had ever touched liquor herself. She had been living in a daze; but the daze had worn off. To-night was the finishing touch. Packy may have been despicable, but his words about Jerry and Sarah at this moment seemed to be justified.

She rose and left, ignoring Davy's pleas for her to stay.

Next morning Jerry came into her room to "talk it over," finally she said, Joy I have never told you about myself. Get comfortable now, because I am going to lay out the whole story.

Joy drew back. "Oh, no, Jerry—please don't tell me anything you'd rather not talk about."

"I also said I would tell you sometime when I felt like it. Now gets the vote."

To begin at the pop of the pistol—I was born in New York—over on the East Side, where people live like flies. I was one of ten—and we all lived in two rooms. Jerry's voice was always out of work. And she stared away from Joy as she talked.

"You don't mean ten people—in two rooms?" Joy gasped.

"Jerry shrugged her shoulders. "That's exactly what I do mean. Not only that, but we took two boarders in our rooms because my father was always out of work."

Joy's eyes were huge disks of horror; already she had suddenly dropped in from Mars. Jerry was continuing rapidly:

"I sold newspapers as soon as I was able to take in the pennies. I was a grey sweater and a pair of bloomers, and talked to everybody who bought a paper of me, whether they slung a line back or not."

She gave a long, quivering sigh. "I don't intend to go into details about my life from the ground floor up—But, get this clear, Joy—I never knew what it was to be innocent!"

There was a pause while Jerry studied her pink mules. Finally, with a swift frown, she plunged into narrative again, obviously leaving a hiatus.

"When I was thirteen, I got a job as messenger girl for Charlotte de Cie, at $5 a week."

"My getting rich quick was the cause of a split between me and the family. I shut my mitt on my income—and the result was the throwing of a few flat-irons so one night I didn't come back and I've never been back since. I hadn't ever bet much on the family—and there was a new boarder I didn't like."

"What do you mean, Jerry?" Joy interposed. "You couldn't live—not live out $5 a week?"

"I could and did. I took a room at a dollar a week. It was a hall bedroom, the kind you don't even read about. No light, and squirming all over. The family never came after me; I guess one more or less didn't make such a hell of a difference."

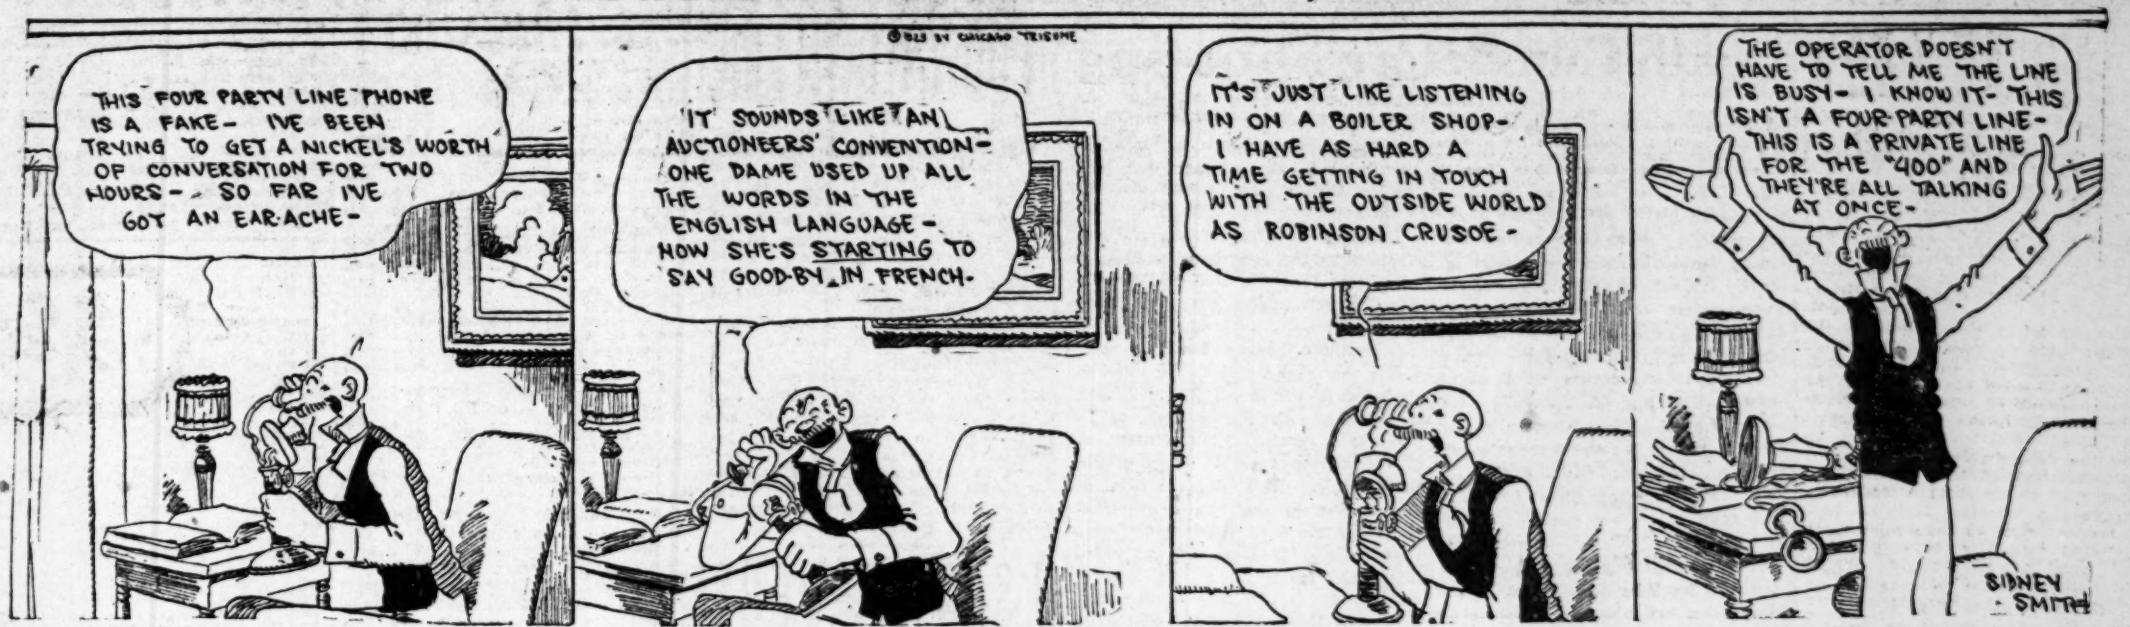

"My next two years I spent carrying bundles for Charlotte's, incidentally absorbing the main truths about what clothes can do to you and what you can do to clothes. I began to put on my old gray bonnet and I admitted was improving on Charlotte designs in doing so."

"I think I was at my worst at fifteen. I tossed a mean make-up and looked probably older than I do now. I had no morals and a bunch of bad ideas. Some of the models were all right, but those weren't the ones who shot their mouths off. About the only rule I went by was to look out for myself."

"Along about then they graduated me into the work rooms. I was five years more at Charlotte's; and at the end of that time I was one of their designers—what I had been working for, all that time." She closed her eyes as if they hurt.

"I saved my money, too, and was the original glued-to-the-neck friend. Men dropped out of my life pretty much in those five years. I was too busy getting ahead.

"Before I go on and get to the heart of the matter—I'll give you a general snapshot of me at my age of twenty. I made myself up every a. m. as peppy as if I were going to tread the boards. I wore my hair in the last gasp from Paris. I cut my clothes as snappy as I could get away with, which was some, you can gather. As for the rest—I was hard as a city pavement, tough as gum, and looked on men as a necessary evil."

"That wasn't your fault?" Joy interposed. "Jerry shrugged her shoulders by way of answer, before going on."

"Then one day a man walked into Charlotte's who—I've never lined this out to a soul, Joy; but I'll try to hold my words in when I talk about him. He came in with his sister, who was empty show their life must— Or is having us do her wedding dress.

"She was Mabel Lancaster. Of course you know who she is."

"I'm afraid I don't," Joy admitted. "The name sounds vaguely familiar."

"Well, New Yorkers would know; it's an old family, not much ready cash; and she tied up to Eustace Drew, also old family, and a lot of ready cash. I had thrown a lot of thought over her dress—but Fanchon spread a noise about having done it herself."

"Joy, he—well, he's tall, and big, and he's got brown hair, sort of choppy, with a pinch of red in it. And his eyes are blue as yours, breezy and full of zip."

"Well—he didn't look at me at all, though I was hard in love with him."

"Those models fascinate me, Phil," I heard his sister say. "What an He came in with his sister, who was empty show their life must— Or is it? What do you think? I've known some of their kind," he answered, "and I can assure you that their chief concern is what they put on or leave off their backs. Poor little rats! Not much 'honor and truth and a sure intent' among them."

"She laughed. 'You're always talking about 'honor and truth and a sure intent,' she said. 'You're so romantic, Phil—anyone would think you were getting married instead of me.'"

"Then he wasn't married! That was my first thought. As for 'honor and truth and a sure intent,' the first two and me weren't speaking. That last—well, I thought I did have a sure intent. To get to the top on designing for Charlotte—that was my aim."

She paused to take breath.

"You really fell in love with him—then?" said Joy.

"Yes, I thought about him on an average of every day, after that."

"I always had believed that you can get anything you want if you want it hard enough to work for nothing but that. And so I began to believe that if I wanted Phil Lancaster hard enough, I could get him. There was this hitch to it, though; I knew how to work for what I wanted, before. Now I was going in the dark. The only right thing I knew was that I was wrong—and that I didn't want to see him again until I was right."

"Then the war came along. When I read his name in the Pittsburgh lists, I decided that I'd better go over to France and see what I could do about it, too. I had a stock-taking of myself, and decided—Y. M. C. A. entertainment was my line. My voice was big and I had pep—but they told me I had no training."

"That's how I connected up with Pa Graham. He was in New York then. One of the designers took me to Pa."

"Then Fanchon came to me confidently one day and offered to sell some of her stock in the Charlotte firm—wartime were getting stiff. I made her out a cheque in quick order. A stockholder. They couldn't kick me out now, I doped it."

"Then I became ill and some medicine decided I'd better not go to France."

"I wanted to get some percentage on my lessons, so pretty soon I got a cabaret job at Hanley's."

"I steered clear of men. It wasn't so easy now that I was at Hanley's, but the thought of Phil Lancaster—it was funny the way he and the things he said stuck in my mind. 'Honor and truth and a sure intent'—I had all of that now, the way I looked at it."

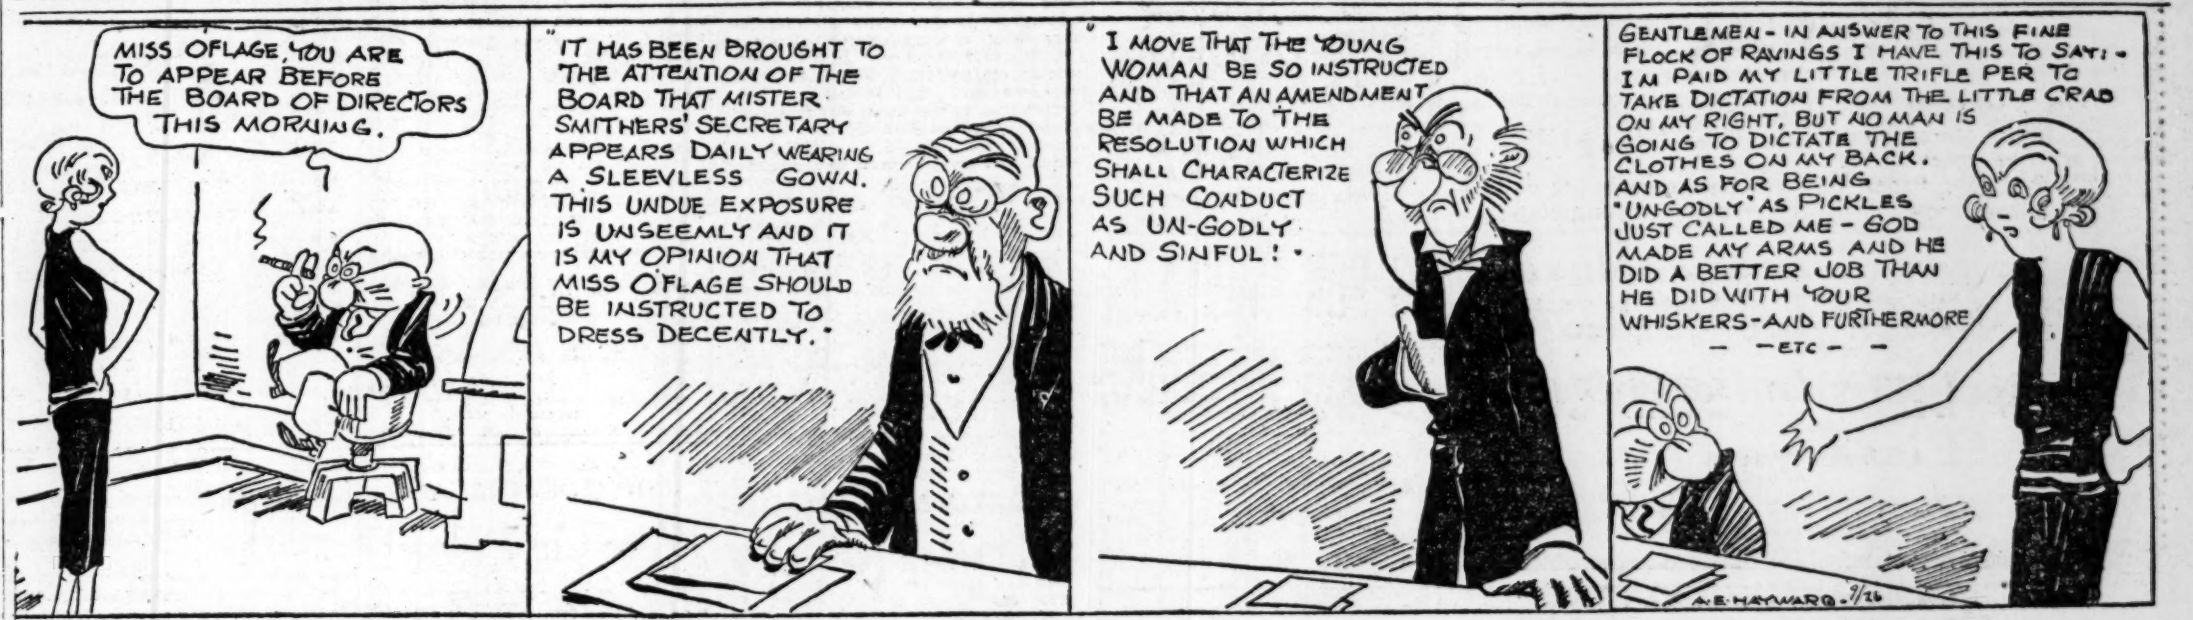

"One night I was at Hanley's singing about eleven-fifteen—when suddenly I saw him—Phil Lancaster. Sitting alone at a table by the wall. He was looking at me, he was looking at me!"

"Later he sent me a note, asking me to come to his table, which I did after changing my clothes. He had had some drinks and wanted more, but being an officer found it hard to get. So I invited him to my apartment, and we started off in a taxicab."

"All the way I was saying to myself, Jerry, you have had so far, right you have to fight for this, but you have been given the chance to fight. To him I said, 'Isn't it unusual for an officer to be alone?'

Canadian crop estimates, profit-taking sales reached such volume that prices were in free-fall. All months dropped below yesterday's finish, but something of a rally was again in progress as the day declined to close.

Bears in the wheat markets put stress mainly on the continued liberal receipts at Winnipeg and on the fact that cash premiums there were very low. Besides, heavy hedging pressure was noted at Minneapolis than for some time, and in this connection it was said Canadian wheat was nearing a peak level for export into the United States. The fact that the cabinet at Washington today considered raising the tariff on wheat from Canada was also here until the market closed.

Corn and oats were dominated as heretofore by frost damage and corn scarcity. New high price records for corn resulted, both in corn and oats.

DAILY STOCK FEATURE

Over Fennel & Beane's Private Leased Wire.

BALTIMORE & OHIO: Baltimore & Ohio dividend meeting tomorrow will be watched with interest. Many anticipate a substantial dividend increase. The stock, probably at the rate of $4 per annum, has advanced about 10% since October 1st. This advance reflected the fear that motor company earnings are in for a sharp declining trend. It is believed that the company is going to get tighter on the growing demand for funds to carry accumulated raw and finished goods inventories.

One news item which attracted much attention in view of the recent optimistic statements made by President Wood of American Woolen, was the dropping of a report supporting that one of the independent manufacturers of boys' and men's clothing there had opened its spring samples cutting prices 20 per cent compared with a year ago. The spring opening of American wool samples saw prices advanced.

Another news item creating much discussion was the appointment of receiver for the Atlantic Fuel company. This company defaulted interest in 1921 and went through a financial reorganization last year of last year. It appears that the company is not able to compete successfully with United Fruit.

TOTAL 175 BUDDEN

EQUALIZE BURDEN, IS PLEA ON TAXES

Columbus, Ga., September 25.—(Special).—At a well-attended meeting of citizens of Muscogee and ad-

No definite conclusion seemed to be reached as to the most effective method of taxation, but the preponderating opinion appeared to favor an income tax as a part of the taxation system.

Those to offer suggestions were Frank U. Garrard, formerly chairman of the Muscogee county commissioners; Howell Hollis, former member of the legislature; Herman H. Swift, former legislator; J. D. Massey, vice president of the Eagle and Union Mills; Miss Anna H. Griffin, Columbus city commissioner; Charles I. Woolfolk, chairman of the Muscogee county commissioners; Mark McCullough, member of the board from Troup county; Dr. C. N. Howard, representative from Chattahoochee county, and A. Jones Perryman, representative from Talbot.

It appears to be the opinion of the speakers that the people of the state and the people should be framed, thus arousing more interest in the government on the part of the people. The speakers also emphasized the importance of the proper expenditure of the money and the fact that the tax commission would probably recommend a clearly worked out budget system as a part of its report, the proper spending of the money being regarded equally important as the raising of a sum adequate to finance the state's needs. Members of the commission said that some of the state's institutions were rotting for lack of maintenance and support and that more money for state purposes was absolutely necessary.

Georgia Farmers Are Urged To Produce Balanced Crops

Production of crops to supply home needs was recommended to Georgia farmers at the meeting to prepare a definite cropping system for counties in this section held Tuesday at the Fulton county court house.

Under the supervision of the State College of Agriculture, twelve such conferences are being held this week in as many different sections of the state. By this means practically every county is being reached. The schedule of meetings for the rest of the week is: Griffin and Waycross, today; Tifton and Macon, Thursday; Albany and Athens, Friday; Columbus, Saturday.

It was pointed out in the conference that more than $200,000,000 is being sent out of the state each year for products which this section can and should grow at home.

Among the products imported into the state each year are:

- Twenty million dollars worth of corn; 8 to 10 million bushels of wheat, mainly in the form of flour; 15 to 20 million bushels of cotton; $100,000,000 worth of meat; 25 million pounds of butter and cheese; 15,000 cars of hay; 150 cars of lima and navy beans; 800 cars of cabbage; 150 cars of onions; 1,200 to 1,500 cars Irish potatoes; 1,500 cars apples; $20,000,000 worth of poultry and eggs.

Planned Farming.

It is planned to establish not only a balanced system of farming, but to develop specialized lines of farming in certain localities. By means of illustration, it is a known fact that the mountain section of north Georgia and the coastal region can produce the Irish potatoes required to take the place of those now imported.

Soil building is to be one of the main features of the program in all parts of the state.

The live stock program, including cattle, hogs and poultry will comprise a good part of the program in most counties. Cotton will, of course, continue to be one of the principal money crops in many sections.

Following these regional conferences, the county agents and leaders will work out definite farm programs for counties.

Counties immediately surrounding Atlanta will have the following program recommended as a basis:

- Live stock, the cow, the sow and the hen, including 1 sow per plow, 2 to 5 cows per plow, 50 hens per plow, and in certain limited, well adapted areas sheep to the extent of 20 to 35 grade ewes and 1 pure-bred ram per farm.

Boll Weevil Control.

Cotton, 3 to 5 acres per plow. The use of approved methods of boll weevil control is urged. Cotton should be

FIFTH WARD VOTE ON COUNCIL RACE

Fifth ward voters will decide Wednesday whether Dr. W. M. Etheridge will be returned to city council for another term of two years or whether G. W. Lindsay will be nominated to succeed him, neither receiving a constitutional majority in the recent municipal primary which developed three candidates in that ward.

The polling precincts for the run-off primary will be located in the ward as follows: Precinct "A" will be at Ponder's avenue and Marietta street and precinct "B" at 500 Chestnut street. The same rules that governed the municipal primary on September 5 will be observed.

The three-cornered race between Dr. Etheridge, Mr. Lindsay and Charles W. Bennett created unusual interest. Dr. Etheridge led the ticket but did not receive a majority of the votes.

Placing of large signs on non-parking and limited parking streets in the city of Atlanta is the plan of the Atlanta Safety council to minimize violations of traffic ordinances and as a further safeguard against motor car accidents, will be undertaken at an early date, it was announced Tuesday.

The executive committee of the council will meet at noon today at the city club for the purpose of discussing other measures toward "unruly" motorists. The plan is to provide the greatest possible barriers against the rapidly mounting number of accidents on the streets of the city.

Referring to the present traffic regulations in Atlanta, members of the council Tuesday expressed the opinion that "something must be done to eliminate the confusion which a visit to the city streets is now a visit to a maze."

With the erection of the signs, the right of way of the council will be better prepared to combat its cooperation with the police department in rigidly enforcing traffic regulations.

Edwin Rosecrans Ends Life After Prolonged Illness

Edwin H. Rosecrans, 53, of 92 Cleburne avenue, who is said to have shot himself Monday afternoon after brooding over continued ill health, died about 4 o'clock Tuesday afternoon at the Georgia Baptist hospital where he was rushed in an effort to save his life.

Until recently Rosecrans was division superintendent of dining cars for the Southern railroad with headquarters in Charlotte, N. C. He has been in ill health for about five years.

Call Officer J. D. Williams, who investigated the shooting, stated that Mrs. Rosecrans said that her husband was alone in the room at the time of the shooting. The bullet entered the right side of his chest and ranged upwards, emerging at the neck, physicians said.

MINISTERS SEEK RELIGIOUS CLASSES

The Atlanta Baptist Ministers' conference has adopted resolutions favoring week-day religious education for Atlanta grammar school pupils, according to announcement by Rev. W. H. Faust, of the ministers' body. The committee was appointed by the conference to draft the petition of the Atlanta Baptist ministers. The report has been adopted and copies of the resolutions submitted to the board of education, it was announced.

The committee drafting the resolutions was composed of the following ministers: W. H. Faust, chairman; John W. Ham and S. A. Cowan. The resolutions adopted and forwarded to the board of education follow:

"Recognizing that the child's spiritual welfare should be at least on a par with his physical and intellectual development, and that the state cannot and should not attempt to function in giving religious instruction, the committee of the board of education of the city of Atlanta, place ourselves on record as favoring week-day religious education for all denominational youth and shall rejoice to see the day when the children of such parents as may desire to have their children at school during the week, shall be able to study under trained denominational leaders to give them needed instruction and thus be enabled to acquire a well rounded and complete education."

NEGRO CONVICT SHOT. One of Two Escaping Convicts Is Wounded.

Will Stewart, negro convict, was seriously wounded in the leg Tuesday day when he and another convict, Joe Mason, attempted to escape from the Sandy Springs camp. Mason was later captured in some woods nearby.

According to information furnished by the convict guard, Stewart and Mason made a sudden dash for liberty as the guard turned his back. Observing the fleeing prisoners as he turned around, he began shouting the first shot taking effect in Stewart's leg, who fell.

Mason made his way to the woods, he is surrounded by guards. He surrendered in less than one hour after he escaped.

Woman Slain After Killing Florida Sheriff

Two Policemen Open Fire After Officer Falls On Porch.

Pensacola, Fla., September 25.—Sheriff A. Cary Ellis, of Escambia county, was shot and killed instantly here late today by Susie McClane, 50, when the officer attempted to arrest her on charges of contempt of court, and the woman in turn was shot to death when two city policemen, who accompanied the sheriff, fired into the house. The policemen began firing when they saw the sheriff fall on the front porch.

One shot struck the woman killing her instantly.

According to police, the woman had been suffering from an affected mind, and, according to them, had annoyed families living at the house owned by H. M. Cobb, of Bagdad, Fla., which house she is said to have claimed as hers.

She had been ejected once before by Sheriff Ellis after some resistance. Cobb obtained an injunction to prevent her from entering the house again, which she is alleged to have violated and was quoted as having told persons in the vicinity she would "die in the house." Ellis, armed with a warrant, went to arrest her, accompanied by the two policemen.

Ellis found the doors locked and all shades drawn. He asked the woman to come out, but she refused. When the officer tried to force the door he fired twice, neither bullet taking effect. He again remonstrated with her, and the door and shades were refused again. Ellis succeeded in opening the door and had started to enter when she fired again and he dropped dead.

Captain of Police Harper at the front door near where Ellis stood, began firing. Captain O'Connell fired through a side window. One of their shots struck the woman.
